GERMAN WANTS TO VE UP OFFICE IF FORD WINS

Further Than Before in Public Declaration of Intention to Resign

HEARS IS 'ENOUGH'

Not Seen as Eroding More the Personal Charm of the Secretary

By HAROLD GERTZMAN

WASHINGTON, May 16—The State Department's main architect of foreign policy, said in a public declaration today that he would resign if President Ford is elected in November. He said he would leave office if he left open the possibility that some unforeseen event might obligate him to go further in publicly stating his intention than he had previously done.

Mr. Kissinger had told aides and some of his closest advisers that he would continue in office if President Ford was elected.

He said that eight years ago, "I would not have done this for any man."

He said that he would leave office if he left open the possibility that some unforeseen event might obligate him to go further in publicly stating his intention than he had previously done.

WEST BANK GIRL KILLED BY ISRAELI

Victim Was From Prominent Family—Soldiers Wound 2 Later at Protest

By HAROLD GERTZMAN

TEL AVIV, May 16—An Israeli soldier shot and killed a 16-year-old Arab girl on the stairs of an apartment house in occupied Nablus this morning.

The girl was identified as Lena Hassan Nabulsi, who Nabulsi officials said was 16 years old, although some reports gave her age as 17 or 18.

MILITARY FLOUTED CIVILIANS' RIGHTS, SENATE UNIT SAYS

Intelligence Agents Accused of Ignoring Legal Curbs in Spying on Dissenters

By JOHN M. CREWDSON

WASHINGTON, May 16—Military intelligence agents have violated the rights of United States citizens in the agents' investigations of domestic political and protest groups, and in the process have threatened "to violate the traditional and legal restraints which govern the use of military forces in the civilian community," the staff of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Activities has concluded.

Reports Confirmed

The Senate staff termed those activities "improper" and went on to confirm reports published yesterday in The New York Times indicating that the Army has also conducted active surveillance of United States citizens living in West Germany and West Berlin whom it considered to be "threats" to its operations.

Until 1968, according to the Senate staff's report, Army commanders in West Germany had unilateral authority to open mail to and from such individuals and to subject them to wiretaps.

Files on All Dissenters

Affidavits from Army Secretary Martin R. Hoffman recently filed in two civil court cases show that Army intelligence officers opened mail in West Berlin as late as 1972, and the affidavits carried the strong implication that such practices were continuing there.

As the Army was called upon with increasing frequency in the early 1960's to respond to civil disorders, the report said, it began what later became a "massive" intelligence collection effort that eventually produced files on "virtually every group engaged in dissent in the United States."

The military's rationale for such surveillance, the staff noted, was that to enable its

An 'Era' Ending for Fisher Hall

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

Pierre Boulez and the New York Philharmonic finished their performance of Mahler's Seventh Symphony at 10:42 on Saturday night in Avery Fisher Hall.

Among those standing backstage, awaiting the end of the concert, were John W. Mazzola, the managing director of Lincoln Center, and Carlos Moseley, president of the New York Philharmonic.

Workmen will be operating around the clock. All of the seats should be out today, and tomorrow the scaffolding will be put into position.

There was no ceremony on Saturday night, although everybody realized that the occasion was, in its way, historic.

Buildings Agency Permits de Mille to Convert—Work Already Under Way

By NICHOLAS GAGE

The New York City Buildings Department, disregarding instructions from the Mayor's office, has issued a permit allowing the owners of Broadway's de Mille Theater to convert it into three small theaters.

The permit was approved within 24 hours after a written request for it was submitted last March 27.

That permit should never have been issued, the Mayor's office said.

Carter's Record as Georgia Governor: Activism and Controversial Programs

By JAMES T. WOOLEN

ATLANTA, May 12—Up in Maryland last week, Jimmy Carter suggested that those who are curious about the kind of President he might be "should look at the sort of Governor I was."

If that is the case, the 51-year-old Democratic front-runner would bring to the White House a quick mind, eclectic intellectuality, enormous physical stamina, boyish enthusiasm, unabashed patriotism, a zealous instinct for reform, deep religious convictions and unflappable confidence in himself and his abilities.

Moreover, if, as he suggests, his record as Governor of Georgia is admissible evidence, the soft-spoken patrician farmer would also bring along an unyielding stubbornness, a humorless and sometimes acerbic impatience with those less single-minded, a mastery of the use of people and institutions for his own purposes, and the willingness of an average politician to exaggerate on occasion.

That, at least, is the complex, composite portrait of Mr. Carter as drawn from conversations and interviews with him and with many of the Georgians who worked both for and against him during his term as Governor from 1971 to 1975.

Beirut Suffers Heavy Toll In New Surge of Violence

By HENRY TANNER

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Monday, May 17—The Lebanese capital and its suburbs went through one of the most violent days of the 13-month civil war yesterday.

Scores of people, most of them civilians, died in exchanges of heavy artillery and mortars. At Barbir Hospital and the American University Hospital, both in the Muslim-controlled western part of the city, hundreds of casualties crowded the overcrowded emergency wards.

A dozen people died in front of a movie house on Corniche Mazra, in a heavily populated Muslim section, as heavy shells fell on the broad boulevard after the matinee. The Beirut International airport suffered heavy, direct shelling.

Those insights, combined with an examination of the documentary testament of his tenure, seem to indicate that his conduct of that office was neither as brilliantly innovative as his campaign brochures suggest nor as abysmally incompetent as his political adversaries insist.

At any rate, it was most certainly an activist administration.

"I didn't care for much that he did or tried to do," said Tom Matthews, the Speaker of the Georgia House of Representatives and an outspoken critic of Mr. Carter, "but I'll say this about the fellow: He was damned aggressive."

Latin Chief of Staff Held in Plot to Sell 10,000 Machine Guns to Underworld

By PETER KINISS

The chief of staff of El Salvador's armed forces has been arrested and charged in Federal District Court in Manhattan with taking part with six other men in a plot to sell 10,000 submachine guns to people he thought were underworld figures in the United States.

Col. Manuel Alfonso Rodriguez, 48 years old, whose Central American republic's forces number fewer than 6,000 members, was held yesterday in $3 million bail on charges of conspiracy to violate gun controls and to defraud the State and Treasury Departments in the proposed $2.6 million sale.

Mount Kisco Saturday night when he allegedly received $75,000 for providing a false weapons certificate to be filed with the State Department stating that the guns were to be shipped to his own army.

Col. Rodriguez, chief of staff since mid-1972, has a reputation for bonesty in his country, which has been arming and has been on a semi-hour footing since a 100-hour war in which it invaded Honduras in July 1969.

With Col. Arthur Armando Molina, who has been President since July 1, 1972, and Carlos Humberto Romero, the Minister of Defense, Colonel Rodriguez constitutes the military command. The armed forces include 4,000 men in the Army, 1,000 in the Air Force and 130 in the Navy.

A Priest in the Basque Country of Spain Tells of Trying to Understand Violence

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times
BILBAO, Spain, May 13—
"Violence justifies counter-violence," the Roman Catholic priest said. "Since we live in a time of violence and the violence of the establishment is so great, so-called subversive violence is sometimes the only form of defense."

The New York Times/May 17, 1976
Basque priests have aided in escapes over French border.

In the Basques' struggle to assert their national identity against Madrid's strong centralism, Catholic priests have traditionally provided strong support. How far many of them have come to identify with even the most extremist proponents of national independence was illustrated by the priest, who allowed himself to be interviewed on condition that he not be named.

His views and ways that are more extreme are more common among younger priests, he said, but he is not a young man, and his views are not rare among priests his age. The radical priest has a parish in this industrial capital of the Basque country. His parishioners are metalworkers and shipyard workers who live in the grimy, cheerless tenements defacing lovely green hills on which they are arrayed.

A Conditional Endorsement
The priest is a pudgy man of middle years with a kindly face and a ready smile. In his grey pants and tan, open-necked shirt, topped by the traditional Basque beret, he looks more like a beadle than a priest.

His endorsement of violence was not unconditional, and his conscience was clearly uneasy. "It is difficult to understand them," he said, speaking of E.T.A., the principal terrorist organization, and of the E.T.A. murder last month of Angel Berazadi Urbe, a Basque industrialist who had been kidnapped for a ransom. "Although they are understandable, from a Catholic point of view it is more difficult to accept them," he continued, thinking out loud about a killing that has caused the E.T.A.—whose initials stand for Euzko Abertzakoa and Freedom—to lose much sympathy here. "E.T.A. is a product, in its general developments as well as its origins, of the disarray of the conditions in which we live," the priest said. "E.T.A. has awakened the Basque people's conscience. The whole world has become aware of the Basque problem because of them."

Targets in Uniforms
Asked who would be legitimate targets of the counter-violence that he defended, he thought for a long time and replied:

"In a certain manner, responsibility for establishment violence belongs to everyone who directly or indirectly or passively makes it possible. That is, a great number of the citizens of Spain, all who wear a uniform and others, are responsible for establishment violence."

The priest did not rule out the possibility that those wearing the uniform of the church, so long a pillar of the Franco regime, might also be considered targets, on his grounds. He said that if a certain bishop had not died, "something might have happened to him."

The church hierarchy, he said, is adopting a waiting attitude, characterized by noncommittal prudence, in the current uncertainty in Spain.

Silence on Killings
"The Basque bishops say absolutely nothing about the dead of Vitoria and Bassauri—where police killings of demonstrators occurred in March—but the bishops of San Sebastian and Bilbao spoke out against assassinations by E.T.A. and killings of civil guards. The church is discredited in Spain except among the small minority of Francists," he said.

"The bishops," he went on, "only say there should be no more bloodshed. A joke is told here: 'For the heart of God, please stop the bloodshed,' the bishop says. And a man asks, 'But what side is God's heart on, the left or the right?'"

The priest drew a sharp line between the hierarchy and many of the lower priests. A recent declaration signed by 1,500 Basque priests, about half the total, strongly urged Basque workers and national rights, the priest said.

Influence Through Inaction
The bishops, he continued, defend their inaction by saying that they abstain from public protest to use their influence with the Government privately.

"They defend their comfortable situations and privileges but are not fulfilling their ecclesiastical mission of denouncing injustice," he charged.

"The bad behavior of the hierarchy is made up for by the local clergy," he continued. "The Basque priests have tried to put themselves at the service of the people." He is one of many who have been jailed for such service. In addition to his six months in prison, he said he has been detained on other occasions and fined several times. For what?

"I have lent my church for clandestine meetings; I have collected money for strikers; I have served as a bridge between people who have gone underground and the outside world; I have participated in demonstrations and signed documents."

Help for the Hunted
Priests have also allowed weapons and explosives to be stored in churches and rectories. Many clandestine pamphlets have been run off on church mimeograph machines. Priests have hidden persons who are being hunted for subversion and have helped get them across the French border where they are received by French Basque priests.

In giving his help to clandestine groups, the priest said he was not taking any sides. "My position has been to cooperate with all who needed me," he said. "Other priests cooperate only with one party."

His bishop calls him from time to time to remonstrate with him, the priest said. "He says I should have consulted him. But if I did he wouldn't let me say what I want."

A Priest's Social Role
What should a Basque priest's social duties be, his flock? He spoke slowly.

"To tell people not to be happy with the situation—political, economic and cultural. The second thing is to do something against the causes and origins of the unhappiness. It could be violence or nonviolence."

Asked about the chances for nonviolent change, he said, "It is very doubtful."

"I am skeptical of all parties," the priest replied, with a negative gesture, when asked if any of the existing groups represented a promise of realization of his aspirations for a democratic Spain in which Basque national rights would be safeguarded. "It is difficult to imagine after so many years."

RHODESIA ATTACKS KISSINGER'S STAND

WASHINGTON, May 16 (AP)—Prime Minister Ian Smith of Rhodesia accused Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger today of uninformed meddling in the affairs of Rhodesia.

Commenting on Mr. Kissinger's statement that the United States supports a government by the black majority in Rhodesia, Mr. Smith said that if Mr. Kissinger were better informed "he would know that any premature handover of power by the whites would swiftly lead to fighting between rival black factions."

Mr. Smith said in a copy-right interview in U.S. News & World Report that Mr. Kissinger "intends to pressure white Rhodesians into handing over this country to a black government in the vain hope that this will discourage Communist intervention."

"Let me assure you we have no intention of appeasing Communism by surrendering our country, despite the fact that the American and British governments deny us the arms to defend ourselves," he said.

Mr. Smith, who was interviewed in Salisbury, said that majority rule can only come through an "orderly evolutionary progress."

S. Says Iran Must Share Atomic Fuel Plant Control

Iran Is Told That Any Reprocessing Plant Operation Must Be Operated Jointly With an Industrialized Nation

By EDWARD COWAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 16—In Economic Affairs, Hushang Amiry, an Iranian official, says a stiffened policy, the United States must share at least one industrial control over any nuclear reprocessing plant.

Amiry also wants to see a nuclear cooperation agreement with Iran which would describe as the right reprocessing arrangement in the United States.

Reason for these proposals is that reprocessing plutonium from uranium fuel rods used in nuclear reactors. The plutonium can be recycled as a reactor fuel or used to make atomic bombs.

Amiry says that the United States is a standard of any nuclear plant which produces power for peaceful uses. The reprocessing of a separate facility, he says, is not a separate activity. It is a part of the nuclear fuel cycle and its records should be kept with the State Department's Energy Research Administration. It is doubted that the United States will yet go deeply into it.

Amiry also said that the United States should have a reprocessing plant under international or at least binational control. Officials here let it be understood that the second country would have to be a Western industrial power, presumably West Germany or possibly France.

Residents of Nablus carry the coffin of a girl killed yesterday during disturbances in that West Bank town.

Israeli Soldier Kills an Arab Girl on the West Bank

Scores of youths assembled later outside Miss Nabulsi's home, where her body lay in preparation for the funeral. The demonstrators waved green Palestinian flags and chanted "Palestine Is Arab!" Some set up roadblocks and set fire to automobile tires.

Soldiers charged the crowd, and a burst of automatic fire was heard. Two teenagers were injured.

Miss Nabulsi was hurt in Nablus this afternoon at a funeral attended by mayors of occupied Arab cities and other prominent personalities. The mourners dispersed without incident.

But there were further demonstrations after the funeral, including tire-burnings and stonings of Israeli soldiers.

Nablus is near Camp Kadum, where a group of Israelis has been camping to demand the right to settle the area, a move the Israeli Government has officially rejected. But many new Israeli settlements are planned elsewhere on the West Bank, which Israel captured from Jordan in 1967. There has been increased pro-Palestinian agitation in the area in the last three months, and several Arabs have been killed as Israeli troops have moved to stop demonstrations.

The disturbances this morning were seen as a continuation of yesterday's protests in occupied West Bank cities timed to coincide with the 28th anniversary of the establishment of Israel.

In Nablus, Israeli sources said, hundreds of students from various schools had assembled in the eastern part of the city and had marched toward the main square. They stoned steel-helmeted soldiers who charged them with clubs. The demonstrators scattered into narrow alleys and some soldiers pursued them.

The fatal shooting occurred later. Stone throwing and tire burnings also continued today in Jenin and Tulkarim, in the West Bank, but no casualties were reported.

Meanwhile in Israel proper a number of terrorist attempts were reported. There were no casualties.

An explosive charge concealed in an egg carton was discovered tonight near a market in a busy section of Jerusalem and was detonated by the police. In Kfar Sava a bomb went off this morning in a bus that had just discharged Arab workers from Kalkilia in the West Bank who had come for work in Israel. The police detained 70 Arabs for questioning.

Shells Stir Turmoil at Beirut Airport

By JAMES M. MARKMAN

BEIRUT, Lebanon, May 16

Middle East Airlines Flight 252 from Athens was the last plane into Beirut today. Shortly after the Boeing 70 jet, emblazoned with the green cedar emblem of Lebanon, taxied to a halt at 6:14 P.M., a rocket crashed into the runway 50 yards away.

On the runway of Beirut International Airport, once the busiest in the Middle East, stood a half-dozen M.E.A. jets, including two 747 jumbos. Hurriedly, the planes began, taking off.

Inside the crowded plane from Athens filled largely with passengers in transit to other points in the Middle East—panic took hold. Ground crewmen hauling a loading ramp to the jet hurried to safety, leaving the wheeled exit stairway standing a few feet from the plane.

Finally, two men appeared from a hangar, leaned against the ramp and moved it up to the plane. Some passengers scampered down to the seeming safety of a waiting bus; others hurried to the hangar. The bus sped off.

Shell Hits Parking Lot

Minutes later, an artillery shell crashed into the jammed parking lot in front of the arrival lounge, raising a cloud of dark brown smoke, mangling parked cars and shattering windows in the terminal building.

A pack of stum boys who carry suitcases for pittance began waiting; one of their number lay in the parking lot, wounded and whimpering. Another boy hobbled toward the lounge, wounded in the legs.

The injured boy lay in the parking lot for 15 minutes. Finally two men took courage, dashed out and carried him to a car, which screeched off to a hospital.

Then another rocket crashed into the parking lot, splintering more glass and wounding a porter dressed improbably in a white suit—hitting him in the legs. A small, dirty boy, dressed in tatters, was blown to the ground by the concussion; he shrieked and fainted, but a group of men who gathered around splashed water on his face and revived him.

Radio Reports Attack

As all this was going on, a woman's voice calmly announced over a loudspeaker the departure of a Middle East Airlines flight to Cairo. People who were not passengers on the plane streamed to the basement bomb shelter.

In the shelter, four men sat on the floor listening to the

Beirut radio station, which is situated on the Moslem side of the line that divides the city.

President Franjeh has given orders to shell the airport with 155-millimeter artillery, which is usually used only against soldiers in bunkers. Moslems and Christians work at the Beirut Airport. Why has President Franjeh ordered the shelling? He wants to close the airport.

Just south of the airport, artillery of the renegade Lebanese Arab Army could be heard firing toward the eastern, predominantly Christian neighborhoods of Beirut.

On a bench in the shelter, two small children—a boy and a girl—whimpered in their mother's lap. The stum boys sat in a pack in their rage against another wall.

"Haram for Lebanon!" said a man, speaking a mixture of English and Arabic. "Haram" means pity.

The airport was closed.

Recent Criticism of Israel Worrying Jewish Leaders

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 16 — the few programs closed to the press. Criticism of Israel by Jews and non-Jews is causing considerable uneasiness among many Jewish leaders in this country. That uneasiness was evident at the annual American Jewish Committee meetings that concluded today. Among the chief concerns were the possible harm that might be done by public debate over Israel's policies in the Middle East and the apparent rise in sympathy for Palestinian Arabs among Christian groups.

Views here were divided between those who believe criticism of Israel by Jews should be largely confined to private forums and those who think public airing of issues would prove more healthy in the long run.

The quandary has become particularly intense against the backdrop of last fall's United Nations resolution condemning Zionism as racism and a number of controversial Israeli actions in the administered territories.

"There is uneasiness and doubt in this audience and in the wider Jewish community about some actions Israel has taken," said Judge Theodore Tannenwald Jr. at a session today. But he said that those reservations should not lead to an attempt to dictate policy to Israel that would place the interests of American Jews above those of the Israelis.

Several participants alluded to an apparent loss of enthusiasm for the Israeli cause. Irving Howe, the author and critic, described the emergence of Israel as bringing "new meaning to Jewish life." But what he called "not an insignificant minority" of Jews find themselves "troubled by policies regarding the West Bank, South Africa, Arabs living in Israel and so on."

Norman Podhoretz, the editor of Commentary, blamed what he saw as a growing climate of neo-isolationism for contributing to his impression that "support for Israel generally has been eroding among the elite groups, including the Christian community. By elite, I refer to government, universities and the business world."

Another long-term observer, James Marshall, a New York lawyer, predicted that future generations of American Jews would be even more critical though staunch in their defense of Israel's right to exist.

As compared with older generations, Mr. Marshall said, "younger people will not be so intensely, so emotionally involved in Israel" and can be expected to give less to the United Jewish Appeal and its various Israel institutions.

He also forecast that "the emotional appeal of the State of Israel will not blind the eyes of the younger people to what they regard as mistakes by the Government. They will not feel that criticizing Israel is tantamount to heresy or treason."

Sensitivity over the possible adverse effects of public debate on Israel extended to the structuring of the meetings. A hearing on the image of Israel in the United States was one of the few programs closed to the press. "The trouble in the Jewish community," said Harold Appbaum, director of the Jewish committee's Long Island chapter, "is how we can try to push Israel to certain directions without appearing to the wider world to be waffling in our commitment."

Much of the caution seems to stem from a fear that hotheaded differences over Israel's policies will be exploited as signs of anti-Zionism. Many Jews say they are eager to detail out the deepening complexities of Middle East issues but not if Israel's interests are left out.

Another Impact

Chaotic perceptions of Israel are believed to be having an impact on interfaith relations as well. In his keynote address, Bertram Gold, the committee's executive director, noted two trends: what he called "a noticeable erosion of Israel's image" by Christians and "a growing separation between Christian and Jewish agencies."

Mr. Gold said that while Jews must concentrate on an endangered Israel, "increasingly the Christian religious leadership is critical of Israel for refusing to recognize the Palestinians' demand for self-determination."

"The choice for us here is how far we are prepared to go in order to seek accommodation with Christian groups," Mr. Gold said.

A long American Jewish Committee report, on Christian responses to the United Nations Zionism resolution showed an overwhelming level of opposition to the racism charge. But support for Israel was found to be, in the report's words, "somewhat more problematic."

"Assuredly, the great bulk of American Christian opinion, both Protestant and Catholic, is sympathetic to Israel," the report stated. But it also said that there was "widespread humanitarian concern for Palestinian Arabs."

Aliyah Center Reports Rise in U.S. Emigration to Israel

The Israel Aliyah Center has reported that the number of North Americans emigrating to Israel increased 28 percent in the first quarter of 1976, reversing a downward trend since the Middle East war of 1973.

According to statistics made public by the center, at 518 Park Avenue, the agency assisted 418 people who emigrated to Israel in the first quarter of the year compared with 327 in the same period of last year.

The first-quarter totals included 177 families and 237 individuals and about 60 percent of the emigrants were under 44 years old, the center said in a statement Saturday.

The center said 37 percent or 268 of the emigrants were from the metropolitan area.

"We don't know exactly why there has been a turnaround," said Yehiel Leket, the center's North American director. "We just hope it continues."

REPORTED SLAIN

May 11 Alleged Rebels Security Officials Killed in Shootout

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times
TEHRAN, Iran, May 16 —
Security forces killed 11 alleged terrorists yesterday after three Iranian officials were assassinated in the capital early this morning, highly placed sources said. The Teheran police reported that the shootout in the Teheran afternoon park area are indirectly connected with the Government, reportedly four policemen had been killed here today but asserted that all had died in three shootouts with terrorists in several other police areas today.

There was no immediate of-firmation of the killings, which constituted the deadliest single day's violence here in recent memory. There was a lot of shooting in the Teheran military mansion area.

Victims Identified Nine incidents involving security officials and terrorists had been reported this year before yesterday, well over a dozen terrorists had been reportedly killed by security men.
The security officials today was ideologically Gholamreza Fardad, chief police commander, and a quarter toward the center of the city. By some reports, Colonel Fardad was wielding a handgun.

It was not clear how many could be deterred this evening, no one was involved in tonnage, but on May 21,
American colonels

Washington's support

ernment, and identities of security officials who were killed today were not disclosed. Nor were details of their deaths by the press except it was said to have been
absence of official announcements, there were reports of at least four shootouts between security forces and terrorists during the night counting the deaths.

At least 11 were reportedly killed in shootouts and five of them in the northeastern section of the city.

Unaffected
The shooting had no effect on the rhythm of life of four million, and security precautions remained in the heart of the city after the afternoon.

Two shootouts took place in the neighborhood in the center of the city, where military facilities of the Government are located.
Other shootouts were reported to have taken place in the eastern section of the city, and in the northeastern section near Dowlat Street and into the Golhak area.

It was reported that the police seized three magazines from the terrorists and 11 handguns and unknown quantities of hand-grenades and explosive materials.

There is speculation that the 11 had been timed with the scheduled departure of the United States newly purchased 747 jetliner making its inaugural flight with Taylor and other showbusiness figures.

Mr. Taylor has been seen in public in the city with Ardashir Iranian Ambassador in Washington, who has been criticized by Iranian dissidents for his lavish lifestyle.

A possible explanation of the violence was the report here yesterday that Fardad, identified as involved in a bombing in the northeastern section had two weeks ago, in a hospital after being wounded in a shootout with security men.

ANSWERS ELUSIVE AT ATOMIC PARLEY

U.N. Envoys and Scientists Discuss Ethical Issues

By KATHLEEN TELISCH
Special to The New York Times
RENSSELAERVILLE, N.Y., May 16—Atomic scientists and United Nations diplomats turned up some unexpected political and ethical considerations at a weekend meeting here on nuclear issues.

Among them: Where can neutral Austria take its complaints when its friendly neighbor Switzerland decides to plant a nuclear reactor on its front doorstep, frightening residents of Vorarlberg with prospects of radiation emissions from across the border, Peter Jankowitsch, Austria's chief delegate to the United Nations, asked. The two countries have been talking politely and getting nowhere, he said.

No Solutions Found

The chairman of Atomic Energy of Canada, Ltd., Ross Campbell, acknowledged that, like others, he was wondering if the sale of Candu reactors to India, Pakistan, South Korea and Argentina carried a moral commitment to take back spent fuel for reprocessing or radioactive waste for disposal, as Britain is doing for Japan.

No solutions to these or other questions were reached by participants at the Conference on

Rockefeller Speech Raises Questions

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BONN, May 16—American diplomats expressed surprise today at an apparently strong political tone in a sharp attack on the Soviet Union by Vice President Rockefeller in Frankfurt yesterday.

Mr. Rockefeller's attack came in a speech at ceremonies marking the American Bicentennial.

"It wasn't the speech the State Department drafted," an American diplomat commented after the speech at the Paulskirche, a church where German democracy briefly emerged in a national assembly in 1848.

Mr. Rockefeller also surprised at least one West German official who accompanied Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the ceremony by calling the Soviet Union an "imperialist" country with power that was "a mixture of czarism and Nuclear Energy and World Order, held on the campus of the Institute on Man and Science here in this village south of Albany. The conference was sponsored by the Institute on Man and Science, the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, the Overseas Development Council and the Charles F. Kettering Foundation.

However, there was general support for a number of approaches, including a world encounter the Soviet Union's growing strength at sea. And to applause from his West German listeners, he said that "in an open world the two German states could be re-united."

The West German press and politicians here did not make any comments about the tone of Mr. Rockefeller's remarks today.

Allegations of United States military weakness have become a major issue in the Republican primary campaign, and Mr. Reagan is now leading the national convention this summer.

An American politician who heard Mr. Rockefeller's Paulskirche speech yesterday said, "It sounds as though he's in the running too—he's out going to be Ford's running mate this fall, and he may think he's still got a chance to win the nomination himself."

Another popular proposal at the conference called for an international energy foundation geared especially to the needs of the poorer countries, to act as a clearing house for data on alternatives to nuclear power, to finance research and development and to provide technical help in developing solar energy and other, renewable energy sources.

Marxism with colonialist appendages." In the 20-minute speech, the Vice President never mentioned the word "détente," which President Ford also abandoned earlier this spring after his conservative rival, Ronald Reagan, said the policy was leading to Soviet military superiority over the United States.

Matter of Speculation

Whether Mr. Reagan's growing strength explained the Vice President's attack on the Soviet Union before a West German audience was a matter of speculation. An American diplomat, however, said the Vice President and his own staff, not the State Department bureaucracy, drafted the speech yesterday.

Mr. Rockefeller said "this new form of imperialism involves ideological, diplomatic, economic, financial, political, subversive, and military structures and relations importantly dominated from Moscow." He called for a NATO naval buildup to

French Socialist Leaders Agree to Cooperate With Communist

By JAMES F. CLARITY
 Special to The New York Times
 DIJON, France, May 10—The Socialist Party, hailing itself as "the first party of France," confirmed its willingness today to cooperate with the Communist Party in order to gain eventual control of the Government.
 The Socialists, concluding a two-day special congress, voted unanimously to cooperate with the Communists in the nationwide municipal elections next spring. But the 600 national party leaders and regional representatives, headed by Francois Mitterrand, also made it clear that the cooperation would be less than total.
 The agreement to cooperate in the municipal elections will not hold, according to a resolution approved here today, in cases where Communist demands for representation in the local elections are considered "excessive" by the Socialists. The Socialists also insisted, in the resolution, that Communists elected to City Councils with Socialist support, cease their traditional practice of voting against local budgets and taxes, a tactic that often embarrasses local Socialist-controlled administrations.

 No Strong Opposition
 The Socialists' unanimity today came after weeks of dissension in the party's extreme left wing, which wanted even closer cooperation with the Communists in the spring elections. But at the Dijon congress, Mr. Mitterrand and his supporters met no strong opposition, in closed meetings or in the public debate held yesterday and today.
 Jean-Pierre Chevechement, the leader of the party's left wing, made a mild speech today supporting the Mitterrand position on cooperation with the Communists. Mr. Mitterrand, in turn, had kind words for Mr. Chevechement, who is widely considered an eventual challenger for leadership of the party. The two-day congress demonstrated clearly that Mr. Mitterrand has firm control of his party and that the party's left wing has been at least temporarily resigned to the position of loyal, if grudging, opposition.

 Socialist officials and delegates here have been underplaying the fact that there has been a noticeable lack of polemics in recent weeks between them and their communist counterparts. Still, the resolution approved here today, asserts that the Socialists are "the first party of France."
 This was an obvious reference to the Socialists' substantial gains in recent local elections and to national opinion polls. Despite strenuous efforts in recent months to liberalize and improve their public image, the Communists have so far failed to show any significant gain among French voters. Socialist strength is widely estimated now at about 30 percent of the voters, while the Communists hold 20 percent.

 Preserving Party's Personality
 During the two days of debate, held in a huge exposition hall near one of Dijon's mustard factories, Mr. Mitterrand and other speakers emphasized that despite their differences with the Communists, they would continue to work for control of the government with the Communists in the 1978 national legislative elections. At the same time, the resolution approved today called on Socialist activists to work to preserve the party's personality—an apparent recognition of complaints in the party's left wing that the national party is becoming too much of a well-oiled electoral machine presenting itself as all things to all men.
 The mood of the special congress—the next regular congress is scheduled for January —was relaxed, compared with the 22d Communist Party Congress held last February in Paris suburb. At the Communist congress, delegates were asked to denounce not only years their ideological horizon, but also to attack sacred doctrine of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

 At Dijon, the delegates were asked, in effect, to keep up good work. The most noticeable dissent in the debate here was when a woman delegate complained that the party had not named women for offices where there was little chance of a Socialist victory. She was applauded, but not wildly.
 The major specific political act of the congress was the approval of the agreement to cooperate with the Communist and the Left Radical Party in municipal elections.

Bicentennial Visitor From France

Valéry Giscard d'Estaing

By WOLFGANG SAXON
Two centuries ago, Adm. Count Charles d'Estaing sailed to America at the head of the first French expedition backing the rebellious American colonists against their British Sovereign.

Man in the Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, President of the French Republic and no stranger to what has since been the United States, arrives this morning in Washington to confer with President Ford and to help celebrate the American Bicentennial. His coming also marks the first flight to this country of the superonic Concorde since it went into commercial service.

Besides the talks with President Ford, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's schedule includes an address to a joint session of Congress and visits to Philadelphia, Houston, Lafayette, La., and New Orleans, from where he will depart aboard the Concorde Saturday.

A Drive to Mount Vernon There will also be ceremonies at Yorktown, where thousands of French soldiers helped the Americans to win their final decisive battle against the British, and a drive, with President Ford, to Mount Vernon for the presentation of France's Bicentennial gift to this country, a historical sound-and-light show.

Though credited with a good knowledge of English, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing—his name is pronounced ZHIS-car-des-lang—improved on it in recent weeks with regular lessons. He has chosen the themes he wants to stress here: the long association of two nations with kindred political philosophies and the need for all the world's democracies to work together regardless of occasional differences.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, 50 years old, is a strong believer in national identity as was President de Gaulle, but he has avoided the abrasiveness that de Gaulle often brought to France's relations with the United States and other allies.

The scion of a brilliant family and the product of elite schools, he worked hard to overcome the appearance of a young technocrat with an air of intelligence, putting in years of government service, particularly in finance, and becoming leader of the Independent Republican Party, a conservative group allied with the Gaullists.

A hard-fought election campaign in 1974 saw him on the stump against both Gaullists and leftists. He won a narrow run-off victory over the candidate of the combined left, the Socialist leader François Mitterrand.

Mindful of the labor and student unrest of de Gaulle's waning days in the 1960's, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing sought social and economic reforms without the upheaval implicit in the Marxist pronouncement.

Believes in national identity and cooperation among nations.

many, where his father was director of finance in the French administration of the occupied Rhineland after World War I.

He graduated from the Ecole Polytechnique and the Ecole Nationale d'Administration and joined the Ministry of Finance in 1952. That year, he also married his wife, a sister of the Marquis de Brantes.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing served as a member of the French delegation at three successive sessions of the United Nations General Assembly and as a deputy in the French Parliament. By 1959, after the formation of the Fifth Republic, his reputation had grown sufficiently for him to be appointed Secretary of State Finance, thus becoming the youngest minister in the new regime.

Three years later, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was appointed Minister of Finance and Economic Affairs. His advocacy, as leader of the Independent Republicans, of free enterprise, European integration and closer relations with Washington did not sit well with traditional Gaullists, and he was dismissed in 1966.

President Pompidou, General de Gaulle's successor, reappointed him to the same position in 1969, and he held it until his own election to the highest office.

President Giscard d'Estaing will be accompanied on his visit by his wife, who also speaks English well. They have two daughters and two sons ranging in age from 22 to 16.

Protocol Played Down

It had been easier in the beginning when the new President, succeeding Georges Pompidou, strove to overcome the remoteness of his office by doing without many of its trappings.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing one of France's youngest presidents, walked along the Champs-Élysées on his day of inauguration, disdainful of the usual morning dress and heavy gold chain. He invited workmen in for breakfast, dropped in on fellow citizens of modest means and titles of nobility dropped from invitations to Elysée Palace. "After all," the palace spokesman said at the time, "France is a republic."

President Giscard d'Estaing and his aristocratic and attractive wife, the former Anne-Aymone de Brantes, were photographed skiing on their holidays. The tall and slender President also liked to hunt.

His other interests tended toward good literature and music. "In music, as in all the things I try my hand at, there is something that can be called perfection," he once said, "I think Mozart is perfection itself."

Says the Polls Err

The President has scoffed at polls indicating a decline in his popularity, saying that the worldwide recession hampered his performance. He and other members of his coalition Government also made clear after the election setback in March that they were ready to fight for his reform program over right-wing objections that it was going too far and left-wing charges that it was a political holding operation.

Valéry Giscard d'Estaing was born Feb. 2, 1926, in Koblenz, now in West Ger-

Americans Cool to the French, But It's a Feeling That's Mutual

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, May 16—Frenchmen and Americans think of each other with distinct coolness, suspicion and above all indifference, was disclosed here today in the eyes of President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's flight to Washington aboard the Concorde.

The results of opinion polls taken in the United States and France in preparation for the state visit came as a surprise to Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and caused some pique as well as astonishment among the public here.

Two of the polls were published in the weekly news magazine Le Point. A third, ordered by the French Government, has not been made public but the general tone of the answers has been disclosed and it closely paralleled Le Point's results.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was said to be particularly startled to learn that Americans did not consider France a good ally, that they placed France fourth after West Germany, Britain and the Netherlands in economic importance for the future, and that they did not consider the French contribution particularly important to United States history despite the crucial intervention of Lafayette's army in the Revolutionary War.

The impact of the disclosures was reflected in considerable radio and press publicity of the results, and some public discussions about why Americans do not like France better. The long-standing assumption here has been that the two peoples hold warm feelings and high esteem for each other despite harsh public exchanges during the late President de Gaulle's rule and what many liked to consider mere surface irritants of politics.

If the pollsters are right, and that has not been challenged, it just isn't so. The Government poll was conducted among two sets of Americans, the general public and what was called "the elite"—important businessmen, scholars and journalists. In every category, it showed that "the elite" were more understanding, sympathetic and better informed about France than the United States public at large, but even so, not the admiring, cherishing, ever-loyal distant cousins the French tended to suppose.

Only 7 percent of the general public considered France likely to be America's best ally in case of a "world crisis," compared with 34 percent for Britain and 33 percent for Germany. General de Gaulle, with 28 percent, outdistanced both the late President Georges Pompidou, with 16 percent, and President Giscard d'Estaing, with 11 percent, as the most friendly French President in the last generation, although official relations soured badly during de Gaulle's presidency and have been steadily improving under Mr. Giscard d'Estaing.

But 45 percent of the Americans questioned had no opinion. The one gratifying answer, from the French view, was that 67 percent of Americans still considered Europe "of prime importance" to the United States, while 22 percent did not think it mattered much, according to Le Point's poll conducted by Gallup. Lou Harris conducted the Government's poll.

French views of America were no more flattering or friendly. The poll here was conducted by IFOP, one of two major polling organizations in France.

Asked if they had confidence in United States "capacity to deal reasonably with current world problems," 53 percent of French respondents said so, 33 percent said yes, and 9 percent had no opinion. The United States gives a bad example of democracy for 35 percent, although only 3 percent said it gave a bad example of capitalism. It is a good example of democracy for only 29 percent and a good example of capitalism for 28 percent.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, 16—The Ethiopian Government tonight made major conciliation offers to Eritrean rebels in an effort to head off an unexpected offer came as thousands of armed fighters were reportedly being sent to Eritrea to begin a Government-supported offensive against the Eritrean guerrillas in Eritrea, which borders the Red Sea.

Gen. Tafari Banti, the chief of state and chairman of the Provisional Military Government, made the conciliation offer on a television and radio broadcast to the nation, which is under tight military rule. Within a few days the Government has denied that it was offering a march by armed volunteers into Eritrea. The sources make it clear that the kind of offensive is un-

Eritrean rebel movements which generally demand full autonomy from Ethiopia depended for its arms and supplies on such Arab nations as Iraq, Libya, Sudan, Saudi Arabia, and others. The Eritrean guerrillas would have to be able to move freely along the Red Sea coast, which is under Ethiopian control. Gen. World Trade Talks: Have Nots Demand a Fair Share

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
NAIROBI, Kenya, May 12
—In terms of identifying the problems of an unbalanced world economy, the delegates to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development meeting here have achieved something close to unanimity. It is the search for solutions that has them at loggerheads.

During the 12 years since the first such conference was held—a period that has seen almost continuous regional and international discussions of the issues—the dialogue has focused on five areas where reform is judged necessary.

The issue of commodities, which has everything to do with the price of tea in China, is the key. The problem is that 17 basic agricultural and mineral commodities make up 80 percent of the exports of the underdeveloped world. The prices of these fluctuate sharply and are largely determined by the buyers, who are able to steer the market by playing off one producer country against another.

Controlled Prices
For example, in the case of sugar, the American sugar trust and the London sugar exchange effectively control prices. A small country like Mauritius, which depends on sugar for 89.1 percent of its total earnings, has little voice in this buyers' market.

In addition, there is the problem of price fluctuations. Zambia, which depends on copper for close to 95 percent of its foreign earnings, was devastated when the world copper price fell by two-thirds in two years as a result of the recession. Fewer cars, fewer television sets being sold in the West meant a lessened demand for copper. Meanwhile, Zambia, a developing country, had commitments for long-term projects entered into when the price of copper was high.

This is the nub of the commodity problem. While the largely Western markets for such produce as coffee, tea, sugar, rubber, jute and copper are dominated by the buyers who control marketing and distribution, the markets for manufactured goods and oil, vital for development, are controlled by the sellers. The developing world therefore is forced to sell cheap and buy high, building up huge deficits.

Several approaches have been advanced to ease the problem, all intended to enhance the collective bargaining power of the commodity-producing nations. In essence, the third-world countries have drawn their inspiration from the success of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. These countries succeeded in forging a solid front and reversing what had been a buyers' market dominated by the oil companies into a sellers' cartel. Now the lion's share of profits is retained by the petroleum countries themselves.

Common Fund Proposed
Now the hope of the third world rests on a proposal made at a meeting in Manila and endorsed by the secretary of the Conference on Trade and Development. It calls for the creation of a common fund, a new international agency financed by both the Western industrialized commodity importers and the smaller, economically weaker exporters.

The blueprint calls for the indexing of the 17 commodities to a market basket of 89 manufactured products. Another feature calls for the fund to maintain buffer stocks in those commodities where spoilage is not a factor. These stocks could be accumulated at times of glut and released in times of shortage, protecting the producer countries from wild price fluctuations. Furthermore, the fund could adjust commodity prices to take account of world inflation rates.

In principle, the idea has something in common with the American program of agricultural price supports, and the entire economic reform package bears similarity to Roosevelt's New Deal. The concept of market intervention and Keynesian mechanics is generally accepted, even by the Western nations. The points under debate are the degree of such intervention.

U.S. Doubts Workability
The United States, for example, feels that a common fund involving so many products is basically unworkable. Furthermore, there is a fear that the administration of the fund would fall to the more radical countries who would seek to manipulate it for political ends. There is also the problem of winning support for such a concept domestically—for it would require heavy contributions by the United States—when the bottom line could mean higher prices for tea, coffee, and bananas in Boston and Hoboken.

Then, too, there is the problem of enforceability. In the absence of any international antitrust legislation, what would prevent a coffee-producing nation from violating calls for curbed production and selling off surpluses at cut rate prices?

And finally, there is the possibility that once the price of, say, sugar was driven up, sugar production could shift to the United States. There, with the technology available, sugar demand could be met from domestically produced stocks, at perhaps even lower prices than those set by the fund. This would damage rather than aid the third-world position.

The United States and the industrialized capitalist nations—except for the Netherlands and the Scandinavian countries—would prefer that instead of a common fund commodity arrangements be concluded between consumers and producers on a case-by-case basis. There are already such mechanisms for tin, coffee and cocoa in which quotas for production and consumption are established and floor prices determined in contracts. It is felt that buffer stocks could be maintained through such mechanisms. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's proposals here last week for an International Resources Bank to open the possibility that such an agency could finance such supplies through the issuance of bonds.

Transfer of Technology
The second point of discussion involves the vital question the third world feels that the industrialized nations control not only the marketing but also the vital processes and information needed for development. The third world has called for an easing of international patent restrictions. It has also demanded recognition by the industrialized nations that private companies operating in the developing world have an obligation to train nationals in necessary skills, gradually turning over key positions to such people.

It is significant that the aspects of Mr. Kissinger's speech that were perhaps best received by the delegates were those calling for measures by the industrialized nations to curb the brain drain to industrial countries of the most talented and trained people from developing nations. The flow of doctors and engineers from countries like Pakistan and India to Canada and the United States is viewed as a major problem widening the gap. Furthermore, Mr. Kissinger proposed a broad program of training for third-world managers and technicians.

Another theme in the debate on transfer of technology that is gaining prominence is the call for alternate and limited technologies more suitable for developing countries than the sophisticated systems developed elsewhere. Here the Chinese are taking the lead, calling for greater self-reliance, greater sacrifice and a rejection of offers from the West that lock societies into continuing dependence. However, the demonstration effect is recognized as powerful. That is, after people have seen cars and tractors, it is hard for them to accept that in their circumstances oxen may be more efficient.

The Question of Debts

The question of debts most tangibly links the problems of the developing and developed nations. As the gap between prices for commodity exports and manufactured goods increased, the deficit in the third world was made up largely by borrowing, mostly from the West and from Western banking institutions. In the 1960's the collective annual debt of the third-world countries stayed constant at about $12 billion a year. By 1972, spurred by inflation and rising oil prices, it leaped to $30 billion. Estimates for the current year put the figure at $45 billion and some countries have come close to defaulting.

The West has a vital interest in preventing this, not only because its governments and private institutions hold the notes, but also because most of its exports are sold in these very countries. If a country like South Korea was no longer to buy tractors, there would be layoffs at John Deere plants in the United States.

The remedy suggested by the third world is a rescheduling and in some cases a cancellation of debts. The industrialized countries are advocating review, again on a case-by-case basis, and the United States has recommended that all development assistance to the poorest countries be shifted from loans to outright grants.

Diversification Sought

Meanwhile, the underdeveloped world would like to increase its chances of diversifying from the production of basic commodities to the assembly and processing of goods for world markets. A pharmaceutical company, it is argued, could just as easily set up a plant in, say, the Philippines as anywhere and given the needs of the third world, it should.

The problem has been that because of political instability and threats of nationalization, private-investor capital has flowed out of such places to areas considered safer.

One demand of the third-world countries has been to eliminate what they consider discriminatory tariffs that work against the Western importation of such goods from such places. Mr. Kissinger promised a review of this problem.

In his recommendation for an International Resources Bank, where he stressed the exploitation of mineral and primary resources, the Secretary nonetheless suggested a mechanism that could establish an atmosphere for greater private investment by guaranteeing the performance of both foreign investor and host country.

Relations With Comecon

The final issue, trade relations among different economic systems, boils down to the demand by third world countries for reforms in trade with the Soviet Union and its bloc, the Comecon countries. Essentially, the developing nations sell the bulk of their exports to, and buy the bulk of their imports from, the West. But the share of trade with Comecon is growing.

At the moment these countries cannot convert ruble surpluses to hard currency. They are, in effect, confined to a barter system in which the revenues they make for, say, the sale of bananas to Moscow, must be spent on Soviet goods. They want to change this and seek payment in convertible currency. Furthermore, the third world wants a change in accounting so that it could apply credits earned in trade with Poland, for instance, against purchases from Czechoslovakia. Finally, third-world representatives here have noted that countries like Indonesia, Chile and Egypt have large debts to Communist countries. They resent the Soviet Union's standing aloof from such questions and insisting that the world economic disarray is a consequence of capitalist contradictions over which it has no control and for which it bears no responsibility.

STRIKE FACTS

APARTMENT RESIDENTS CANNOT AFFORD AN ADDITIONAL $4,500 PER EMPLOYEE...

This is what the recommendation of Mayor Beame's special panel will cost during the life of the three-year contract. Apartment residents must not be saddled with increased costs of this magnitude.

AT A TIME WHEN MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES HAVE ACCEPTED A THREE-YEAR WAGE FREEZE, WHY CANNOT LOCAL 32B MODIFY ITS DEMANDS?

THE ISSUES:

- Currently, 32B employees cost owners $13,000 per year.
- While the cost of living has increased 50% since 1970, the average 32B employee wage has increased almost 100%. Today these employees earn a minimum of $184 a week with superintendents at much higher levels.
- Local 32B building employees are among the highest paid workers in their category. It is unfortunate that Mayor Beame's special panel, in the few hours allotted them, did not recognize these facts.

WHAT UNION DEMANDS MEAN TO YOU:

RENT CONTROLLED AND RENT STABILIZED TENANTS—Increased wages and fringe benefits can only mean increased rents. Both the rent control and rent stabilization systems provide for ultimate pass-alongs to tenants of all increased costs.

COOPERATIVE OWNERS—Each rise in maintenance costs has resulted in a corresponding decrease in apartment values. To preserve their investments, cooperative owners must resist further inflationary increases.

MITCHELL-LAMA RESIDENTS—70% of Mitchell-Lama buildings are already in serious financial difficulty. They are already operating at a deficit. Further increases would cause extraordinary hardships.

Apartment residents' support has helped the Realty Advisory Board immeasurably in its efforts to negotiate an equitable settlement. We recognize the difficulties residents have experienced and will work toward a speedy resolution of the strike.

Simon Says He'll Ask U.S. Not to Cut Aid to Chile

Special to The New York Times

CANCUN, Mexico, May 16—Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon said today that he would ask Congress to maintain economic aid to Chile, without further cuts, on the basis of assurances from the head of the ruling junta there that human-rights conditions would be improved.

Mr. Simon, ending a Latin American trip with a meeting with President Luis Echeverría Alvarez of Mexico at this Caribbean resort, said the release last week of 49 political prisoners in Chile was a "very positive sign." Many of the 49 were allowed to seek exile in the United States.

Mr. Simon met with Gen. Augusto Pinochet, the head of the Chilean junta, during a visit to Chile last week at the invitation of Jorge Cauas, the Finance Minister. The purpose of the trip was to discuss United States financial aid, but Mr. Simon devoted most of this time to discussing international reaction to human-rights violations in Chile, as an obstacle to economic cooperation.

Admiration Is Expressed

Mr. Simon said he admired efforts by Chile to restore "economic freedom to its people" after the 1973 overthrow of the leftist regime of President Salvador Allende Gossens. The Treasury Secretary said in an interview on a beach here that restoring stability, after the inflation and conflicts that had disrupted Chile's economy, required "discipline."

"Are you saying that human freedoms are impossible under a military regime?" Mr. Simon said, in reply to a question whether personal and political freedoms could be restored under the Chilean military.

Mr. Simon said that promises obtained from General Pinochet of further release of prisoners, constitutional reforms protecting individual rights and acceptance of United Nations inspection, would have to be "watched carefully."

Discussions on the ground rules for the visit of a United Nations human rights commission to Chile are to begin after the foreign ministers of the Organization of American States meet in Santiago on June 4. In the meantime, Mr. Simon said, he will ask Congress to hold off on reduction of foreign aid to Chile.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy and other critics of the Chilean Government have blocked all military aid. They propose that $90 million in economic aid for Chile be reduced to $25 million in the foreign aid bill now before Congress.

Mr. Simon met here with José Martínez de Hoz, Argentina's Minister of Economy, who is on hand to attend the 17th annual meeting of the Governors of the Inter-American Development Bank, which opens tomorrow.

Argentina Aide to Visit U.S.

Mr. Simon said he was "very impressed" by a plan, drawn up by Mr. Martínez de Hoz since the overthrow of President Isabel Martínez de Perón, by the military in March, for recovery from a national inflation of 700 percent a year.

Mr. Martínez de Hoz, an advocate of private enterprise and stable finances, will visit Washington in June, Mr. Simon said. The Argentina foreign debt, now calculated at close to $10 billion, will be a major subject when the minister travels to the United States and then to Europe to seek financial relief.

After meeting with President Echeverría, following lengthy talks with Ramón Beteta, Mexico's Minister of Finance, Mr. Simon said that Mexico has a "basically strong economy." He said that corrective measures were being taken by the Government to reduce inflation and the deficit in foreign accounts.

Urban League Pays Bicentennial Tribute To Black Americans

The National Urban League, as a part of its participation in the Bicentennial, will this month distribute to political leaders, schools, colleges and churches 4,500 copies of an eight-pound, 1,206-page reference book "The Black American."

The civil rights organization will also give out 300,000 copies of pamphlets on blacks' involvement in politics, education, economics, communications, and in the nation's wars, as well as a pamphlet on the black family.

"Blacks should take part in the Bicentennial," the league director, Vernon Jordan, has said, "but on our own terms and with the goal of adding substance and a black perspective to an event badly in need of both."

This conditional support of the celebration of America's 200th year of independence closely parallels the expressions by several other blacks during recent interviews.

They saw a need to point up the black contributions to America but, at the same time, expressed the fear that an unconditional support of the Bicentennial might be misinterpreted to mean they were content to overlook conditions of racism in America.

And blacks who have refused to relate to the Bicentennial, a minority of those interviewed, gave continuing racism as their reason.

And Julian Bond, the Georgia state legislator, has made this point:

"To debate whether or not we ought to be in the 'system' is like telling a drowning man he shouldn't be in the water; he is and so are we."

How many times have you decided to give up smoking?

Nobody these days is telling you not to give up smoking. But if you've given it up more times than you'd like to remember, the chances are you enjoy it too much to want to give it up at all.

If you're like a lot of smokers these days, it probably isn't smoking that you want to give up. It's some of that 'tar' and nicotine you've been hearing about.

So you tried cigarettes which were low in 'tar' and you found yourself checking every once in a while to see if they were still lit. Which drove you right back to your regular brand.

Now, there is Vantage.

Vantage cigarettes, either filter or menthol, deliver considerably less 'tar' and less nicotine than most cigarettes.

But what really makes Vantage special is our special filter which allows the tobacco flavor to come through.

Vantage isn't the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette, but it may well be the lowest one you'll enjoy smoking.

And that's what makes all the difference.

Issue and Debate

Health Maintenance And 'a Simple Idea'

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 16—Five years ago, President Nixon coined the term Health Maintenance Organization to describe prepaid health groups—those organized medical services that allow a family to pay one set fee for almost all its medical care.

He said that he wanted the Government to expand these services, which served seven million people at the time, to serve one-fifth of the American population.

Prepaid groups like the Kaiser Permanente medical care program, headquartered in California, and, to a lesser degree, the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York had earned good reputations for giving high quality care more cheaply than did the traditional fee-for-service system. The groups worked on a fixed budget and had an incentive to keep people well and out of the hospital, where care is very expensive.

"It was a simple idea," said Dr. Walter McClure, an economist who is with the Minneapolis-based health research organization Interstudy. Interstudy's head, Dr. Paul Elwood, is the architect of the original Nixon proposal.

"Whatever happened to that simple idea?" Dr. McClure asked the other day.

The Background

The initial support that the Administration had given to rapid expansion of H.M.O.'s soon gave way to pressure from organized medicine, which saw them as a threat to the private practice of medicine.

Some doctors put heavy pressure on Mr. Nixon to back away from the principle, and he did.

No announcement was issued saying "The Nixon Administration is having second thoughts about H.M.O.'s," but the proposal never got off the ground.

Dr. John G. Smillie, president of the Group Health Association of America, an organization of 22 prepaid group practices, said earlier this year that the movement was suffering from "official neglect."

However, Congress passed a bill in 1973 that provided grants and loans for five years for "demonstration" H.M.O. development. Businesses with more than 25 employees in communities where doctors offered prepaid health-care plans were required under the bill to provide a federally certified H.M.O. in addition to regular health insurance plans—the so-called dual choice provision.

Another provision allowed states to remove from their laws on medical practice clauses that kept doctors from forming groups and, in some cases, from delegating responsibilities to assistants.

Open Enrollment

The law contains an open-enrollment provision that says that doctors offering prepaid health systems must, during one month each year, accept any person who applies, regardless of medical history.

In addition, the H.M.O.'s must charge all subscribers the same premium, regardless of their history of utilizing services. This is called community rating.

The problem with the law is that it was a compromise of two differing bills that turned out to be a compromise that no one could really live with, according to critics of the program.

"The primary weakness of the H.M.O. Act is a built-in conflict between the law's objectives and the mechanism to achieve them," a report prepared by the Congressional Budget Office said.

The House version of the bill, sponsored by Democrats Paul G. Rogers of Florida and former Representative William Roy, a physician from Kansas, was a simple bill, much along the lines of Mr. Nixon's proposal.

The Senate version, sponsored by Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, was more like a model for national health insurance.

The $5 billion Senate bill sought to expand access to the health delivery system, using such features as open enrollment and community rating. It mandated dental and extended mental health coverage, services that were not then required in most health insurance policies.

Many of these features stayed in the compromise version.

When H.E.W. finally issued regulations last summer and fall defining what a health maintenance organization had to do to receive Federal approval, no existing plan had a generous enough benefit structure to qualify.

The H.M.O.'s, whose premiums are often higher than those of traditional medical services to begin with, complained that the new law which sought to expand these groups, was in fact making them less competitive in the health insurance market.

The Issue

Five years after the inception of an idea and three years after legislation was passed, only 12 of the 181 prepaid group practices in the nation qualify under the Federal definition of health maintenance organizations. The model plan, Kaiser, is not among the 12.

The H.M.O. movement continues to be popular—10 million people are now covered with private insurance companies, such as Blue Cross-Blue Shield, who have set up 70 H.M.O.'s.

H.E.W. has given $31 million to 157 groups to develop H.M.O.'s and lent $13 million to nine of the 12 qualified plans. Loans have not yet been approved for the three other qualified plans.

However, the question is, has Federal action on health maintenance organizations helped or hurt the development of "that simple idea?"

The Opponents

A number of H.M.O. and other health care organizations banded into a special interest association called the Consensus Group find the law too stringent. They also contend that the law requires H.M.O.'s to be better, more humane and more generous than the entire health and delivery system of which are a part.

Because the law requires Federal approval before businesses are required to offer H.M.O.'s to employees, existing H.M.O.'s feel that they must receive the Federal seal of approval to stay competitive.

As a result of this, G.A.O. concluded in a report last fall that the H.M.O. Act of 1973 was more of a detriment to development of new plans than it was an incentive.

"How simple life would be if the [Nixon] Administration bill had been passed," said Dr. Frank H. Senbold, action director of the H.M.O. program.

The Proponents

Both Senator Kennedy and the American Medical Association are in favor of the existing law.

Dr. James H. Sammons, executive vice president of the A.M.A., wrote to Representative Rogers arguing that the H.M.O.'s should be required to have open enrollment and community rating provisions. His argument was that since the organization's could dispense medical care more cheaply than the individual doctor could, they should repay the system for its efficiencies.

The A.M.A. advocates that H.M.O.'s be required to enroll the sickest, and therefore the most costly, patients, thus increasing their expenses and possibly their premiums, which tend to be higher than those of regular health insurance anyway.

Senator Kennedy's thinking is different. "We are trying to get away from the anticompetitive practices in health insurance," said Dr. Philip Caper, a member of Mr. Kennedy's staff. "The private sector has not assumed their social responsibility. They are in it to make money. The Government should get involved to do what private industry has not done."

He said that the Senator wanted to get away from the practice of refusing sick people insurance coverage because they were bad insurance risks. The original Kennedy version would have supplemented operational deficits caused by such cases, but the compromise bill did not.

Dr. Caper said that the development of H.M.O. was a slow process and that it was probably better to set the model at first—even if such an approach took longer—than to set something in motion that would have to be overhauled soon.

It doesn't make sense, he said, to set up a lot of centers that H.E.W. cannot monitor.

The Outlook

The criticism of the law has led to proposed amendments, which passed the House last November but were reported out of Senator Kennedy's committee just last week. Floor action should be completed in the next few weeks, and then the House and Senate versions will have to be resolved in conference.

Illinois Towns Are Center of Feud Over Which Side of River Should Get New Airport for St. Louis Area

 On the other side of the the Waterloo-Columbia location is closer to downtown

 St. Louis, that the metropolitan area should be looking eastward rather than west-would be up to 100 miles from downtown.

 But the prime argument of the Illinois faction concerns economic benefit not only for downtown St. Louis but also for the East St. Louis area, one of the most depressed in the country.

"The airport is needed on the east side to provide jobs

 of East St. Louis.
 The International Concept
 "Not only that," he con-

 it is necessary to complete

 Illinois side of the river. He and other pro-west siders have even picked up some support east of the river from a few farmers who believe an airport near their communities would have a negative effect.
 George D. Wendel, director of the center for urban programs at St. Louis University, said that the idea for an eastern site had come when some officials, disturbed by the westward movement of population from the river, "took a billion-dollar long shot gamble to get people moving downtown and east again."

 "No Guarantee of That"
 "The gamble," he said, is "that if the airport is in Illinois, all those people would use downtown hotels and restaurants, but there's no guarantee of that."
 When the debate became bitter and personal, Clarence C. Barksdale, president of the First National Bank of St.
 Louis and chairman of the Regional Commerce and Growth Association, appointed a committee, made up of four persons from Missouri and four from Illinois, to make recommendations.

 "The debate had gone on far too long. It was divisive and had polarized both sides of the river. So I thought I would appoint an objective, fact-finding committee," he said.
 But the committee's report, issued last October, only provoked the Missouri side even more—especially since Mr.
 Barksdale, who is a prominent St. Louisan, and four others from the west side of the Mississippi joined in a unanimous conclusion that Lambert was the victim of obsolescence and poor management and that the Columbia-Waterloo site should be designated as the new airport location when one was needed in about 15 years.

 The report also said that the controversy was beginning to affect economic development in the area. Mr.
 Barksdale said in an interview that leaders were neglecting other pressing problems.
 "There was a lot of pressure on me not to name a committee," Mr. Barksdale said,
 "and then more pressure not to release the report. The matter affected friendships and business deals."

Five years ago, Mr. Wendel of St. Louis University reported, the pro-Illinois forces felt optimistic because there was a Republican Administration in Washington, a Republican Governor of Illinois, Richard B. Ogilvie and a Democratic governor of Missouri.
 But now that has changed.
 Dan Walker, a Democrat, is Illinois Governor, and Christopher S. Bond, a Republican, is Governor of Missouri.
 Moreover, Mr. Bond is considered close to President Ford and has been mentioned as a possible nominee for Vice President, a point that the pro-east siders feel is against them.

Military Violated Civilians' Rights, Senate Study Says

...to respond effectively to presidential requests for assistance in times of civil disorder... was necessary to learn about the goals of dissident groups. Although there is no statute authorizing military surveillance of the political activities of private citizens, the report said, the Constitution gives the federal government the responsibility of protecting each of the states "against domestic violence."

The committee staff noted, however, that the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, which conducted an extensive investigation of military intelligence activities in 1971, had been "unwilling to apply the authority to conduct political surveillance of civilians from the role assigned by statute to the military in the event of civil disturbance. In all, the committee staff estimated, 100,000 individuals and a "similarly large" number of domestic organizations were subjected to surveillance by Army intelligence agents "who are young and could easily mix with dissident young groups of all races." In addition to civil rights protests, such as the 1968 Poor People's March on Washington, and anti-Vietnam war organizations like the National Mobilization Committee, Army agents penetrated a coalition of church youth groups, classes at New York University, a conference of priests convened to discuss birth control and the late Rev. Martin Luther King.

...Southern Christian Leadership Conference. While the covert infiltration of such organizations was a principal technique, the report said, Army intelligence agents monitored protest marches and rallies by posing as newsmen and by recruiting civilian informers to work in the agents' behalf, before the Defense Department's nationwide intelligence collection effort was declared to have been ended in 1971.

In an effort reminiscent of, but narrower in scope than the "Comintpro" domestic counter-intelligence programs of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, military officers and enlisted men also set out to harass and disrupt attempts of some anti-war groups to organize public demonstrations, the report said.

Among the individuals on whom the Army maintained intelligence files, it added, were Dr. King; the late Whitney M. Young, head of the National Urban League; Julian Bond, the Georgia State legislator; Arlo Guthrie and Joan Baez, folk-singers; Dr. Benjamin Spock, the child care specialist and antiwar activist; and Senator Adlai E. Stevenson 3d, Democrat of Illinois.

The experience of the late 1960's which the committee staff termed "the most intrusive that military intelligence has ever made into the civilian community," resulted in the issuance of new Defense Department directives that presumably eliminated some intelligence activities against United States citizens and sharply curtailed others.

The Senate report pointed out, however, that the 1971 restrictions, while barring the collection of intelligence about individuals "unaffiliated" with the military, excepted from that prohibition individuals or groups that the Pentagon considered "threats" to its operations or security.

Although the committee staff said it had found very few apparent violations of the 1971 directive, it pointed out that the directive was an administrative one, and that "no matter how effective it may have been in the past, the directive can be rescinded or changed at the direction of the Secretary of Defense."

Mondale Says Panel Seeks F.B.I. 'Assassination File'

WASHINGTON, May 16 (UPI) — The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Activities has asked the Justice Department to turn over a previously undisclosed "assassination file" of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, according to Senator Walter F. Mondale, Democrat of Minnesota. Senator Mondale, a member of the committee, said today on a CBS television program "Face the Nation" that the intelligence agencies had generally been "quite forthcoming" about providing material on their secret operations. "But, Mr. Mondale said, 'There is some evidence we haven't seen everything.' He said that committee staff members had come across an F.B.I. file with an assassination heading while working on an investigation of a assassination of President Kennedy. "It was apparently labeled 'assassination: Mr. Castro,' or something like that," Mr. Mondale said.

Tydings Bid for Comeback in Maryland Overshadowed by Presidential Race

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

BALTIMORE, May 16—Can a victim of alleged Watergate dirty tricks find vindication at 48 by returning to the United States Senate?

The question is one that stalks Joseph D. Tydings, the son of a celebrated democrat, the late Senator Millard E. Tydings.

Joseph Tydings lost his Senate seat in 1970 after one term. He described this in part to the Nixon White House, which he said planted a fabricated story of an alleged maneuver by Mr. Tydings for personal gain on a Government contract with Life magazine, which published it shortly before the November election.

He also cites unreported White House-controlled campaign funds that were allegedly secretly channeled to the Republican who narrowly beat him than. The victor was present incumbent, J. Glenn Recall Jr., also the son of a long-time Maryland Senator.

In his comeback bid to Tuesday's primary here, Mr. Tydings seeks the nomination to contest Senator Beall again this fall, and it would ordinarily be the stuff of high political drama. But the Democrats' senatorial jockeying has stirred little interest for a number of reasons.

One is the remarkable excitement that Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California has stirred up in Maryland in the Presidential preference primary.

In barely two weeks of campaigning, when Mr. Tydings and his principal opponent in the Democratic race, Representative Paul S. Sarbanes of Baltimore, would otherwise have expected to peak their own efforts, Mr. Brown has come up from nearly last place in The Baltimore Sun poll. Now he is within one percentage point of former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, heretofore a comfortable front-runner here. The poll Thursday gave Mr. Carter a 28 percent preference of those questioned and Mr. Brown 27 percent.

The polls found that the belated stirring up of the Carter-Brown competition here had relegated the five other candidates to the Democratic preference ballot in near-fringe status. They were Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona with 8 percent, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama each with 5 percent, and former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma and Ellen McCormack, the anti-abortion candidate, with less than 1 percent. Mr. Jackson and Mr. Harris are no longer actively campaigning and Mr. Udall has not been here much.

In the separate balloting for the direct election of delegates to the Democratic National Convention, the poll suggested that Mr. Carter, with full slates of delegate candidates across the state, would gain most of Maryland's 53 convention votes. Forty delegate seats are to be decided on Tuesday and the remaining 13 will be allotted later in proportion to the candidates' totals in that voting.

In the Republican Presidential primary, The Sun poll showed that former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California was closing but not overcoming his large, earlier lag behind President Ford, with a 34 percent preference among Republicans surveyed to 44 percent for Mr. Ford.

Liberal Image
Republicans will vote here in a winner-take-all primary. The candidate taking the highest vote in each of eight districts wins three seats per district, and the statewide winner takes the remaining 19 at-large delegates, for a total of 43.

Another explanation for the lack of fervor in Mr. Tydings' Senate race is that he is perceived by some Democrats as a New Deal, big-spending, big-government liberal despite his efforts now to project a more conservative, fiscally prudent image. His record in the Senate from 1960 to 1970 seems to many to bear out this perception.

He is struggling, then, to persuade Marylanders that he has softened his formerly tough position on Federal gun control legislation, once the toughest in the Senate. This stand inspired a well-organized and well-financed campaign against him in 1970.

Mr. Tydings was the United States Attorney for Maryland for three years before his successful Senate race in 1964 at the age of 36. In his six years since leaving politics he has practiced law, been divorced and remarried, and suffered a substantial decline in a personal fortune through ill-starred real estate investments. Federal law, in any case, now limits his financing of his own campaign.

Mr. Sarbanes, the scholarly, 48-year-old, three-term Congressman who is Mr. Tydings' only serious challenger in a field of eight candidates, has been heavily supported by labor and Greek-American contributors and has outspent Mr. Tydings, according to their public reports, by nearly 2 to 1.

The primary struggle for Mr. Sarbanes' seat has given Barbara A. Mikulski, a 39-year-old women's rights leader, a chance to undertake her third election campaign in three years. She was defeated in a bid to unseat Senator Charles McC. Mathias Jr., a Republican, in 1974. Last year she was elected to a second four-year term on the Baltimore City Council. Nine other Democrats are contenders.

The outcome of the Tydings-Sarbanes contest is too uncertain to call, according to a number of politicians. The same uncertainty prevails in the Third Congressional District that is being vacated by Mr. Sarbanes for the Senate race. The same is true in the Eighth District in the Washington suburbs of Montgomery County, where Representative Gilbert Gude, a wealthy Republican, is retiring at the age of 53 after five terms.

Kissinger Wants to Quit Office Even if Ford Wins in November

He said, "I briefed the Cabinet two weeks before I went in the presence of all of the political experts, and nobody said this was a bad time to go."

In the NBC interview, Mr. Kissinger defended the African trip as having given African nations "a moderate alternative" to further wars in Africa.

He said that if negotiations between whites and blacks could begin in Rhodesia, "perhaps all of the parties will conclude that negotiation is preferable to bloodshed."

On the Panama Canal, which has become another campaign issue, Mr. Kissinger rebutted criticism of the current negotiations by asserting that if necessary the United States "will defend the Panama Canal."

But the President, he added, must be able to show that every effort for a negotiated arrangement with the Panamanians was taken first.

On the Middle East, he saw no progress toward peace now, but said that he still believed that progress was possible. "I believe that the chief element for its exists, and it is only a question of time before the momentum starts again."

Asked about recognition of Vietnam, Mr. Kissinger said that there was no progress in this direction, because Hanoi tried to "blackmail us by using the remains of Americans to extort economic and other aid, and we will not be blackmailed by the American suffering, and we will not attach any conditions to the missing in action."

Mr. Kissinger has been criticized by some of Mr. Ford's political advisers as a liability to Mr. Ford's efforts to win the Republican nomination.

An issue in Primaries

Ronald Reagan, Mr. Ford's rival for the Republican nomination, has made Mr. Kissinger and his policies a prime target in the primary campaigns. In particular, Mr. Kissinger's recent African trip, on which he promised to help to end white rule in Rhodesia, has been cited by some of Mr. Ford's aides as having contributed to Mr. Ford's defeat in the Texas primary.

Mr. Ford has publicly stated that Mr. Kissinger can remain as Secretary of State as long as he wants, even into a new Administration.

But some of Mr. Ford's aides, such as Rogers C. B. Morton, the head of the Ford Election Committee, and Melvior R. Laird, a close friend have said publicly that they believed Mr. Kissinger would not be Secretary in a new Ford Administration. This was interpreted as pressure from the Ford camp on Mr. Kissinger to state his intention of resigning, thereby helping to remove him as a campaign issue.

Those comments were not well received by Mr. Kissinger, who does not want to leave office under pressure, his aides say.

The criticism of the African

While Other Candidates Scramble, Reagan Still Campaigns at His Own Pace

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16—In these days of frenetic Presidential primary campaigning, Ronald Reagan usually appears to be marching to a different drummer.

Coming into the final weeks of the long primary season, which ends on June 8 with crucial contests in California, Ohio and New Jersey, the Democratic Party's candidates are scrambling all over the landscape seeking endorsements, votes and money.

And President Ford, faced with what could be a vital test of his strength Tuesday in his home state, greatly expanded his planned campaign in Michigan to include this whole week-end.

But Mr. Reagan, the Republican challenger, even while acknowledging that he had an outside chance of upsetting Mr. Ford in Michigan, campaigned in the state only one day last week.

And he did not return for a final, all-out effort there after going to Oklahoma to address that state's Republican convention. (Mr. Reagan was awarded the rest of the 38 delegates that Oklahoma will send to the national convention to go with the 18 he had already won.)

Instead, he flew back to his Pacific Palisades home, as he does almost every week, for three days of relaxation and some time for strategy sessions and issues study.

The former Governor and his aides do not really expect to beat Mr. Ford in his home state, but they are confident that they will win a fairly sizable number of Michigan's 84 convention delegates, which will be divided proportionately according to the popular vote on Tuesday.

They concede that any slight chance of victory they may have depends on the effectiveness of Mr. Reagan's appeals to Democrats and independents to cross over and vote for him in the Republican primary.

Another Strategy
Apparently, one reason that the Reagan camp has not stepped up its efforts in Michigan has been to prevent Mr. Ford, if he wins, from contending that he defeated Mr. Reagan in a hotly contested primary.

After a string of victories in North Carolina, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, Indiana and Nebraska, the Reagan camp does not want the President to appear to be making a strong comeback should he win, as expected, on Tuesday in Michigan, and in Maryland, which Mr. Reagan has avoided altogether.

But those tactics do not entirely explain the different pace of the Reagan campaign.

Before last Tuesday's important test in Nebraska, for instance, the 65-year-old former Governor took four days off. Next week there are six primaries, in Kentucky, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Arkansas and Tennessee, in most of which he is expected to do well. But his schedule calls for him to begin campaigning Wednesday and return home late Sunday afternoon for two more days of rest before opening his drive for support in California's important, winner-take-all primary.

Many of those who have followed the Reagan campaign agree that it is unlike any other they have observed.

For one thing, even when he is on the road for a few days,

Mr. Reagan's schedule is seldom as grueling as those of most other candidates. On an ordinary day he may appear at 8:30 A.M. at a breakfast of supporters, tape a local television interview, make a luncheon speech, perhaps do some more television taping in the afternoon, appear at a reception at his hotel room about 9 or 10 P.M. He usually retires at 9:30 P.M. Most other candidates feel lucky to wind up their days by midnight.

Aboard his chartered plane, Mr. Reagan sits quietly in a window seat in the front row, reading news reports, preparing for his next speech—although they seldom vary—or conferring with one of his advisers. Never known as a gregarious person, he does not mingle with the press following him or with his own aides.

In an age when most candidates spend much of their time trying to outdo each other at "media events," shaking hands at shopping centers, visiting coal mines, steel mills and grain elevators—anything that will provide a backdrop for the ubiquitous television and still cameras—Mr. Reagan shies away from such activities.

Although the former movie actor is generally acknowledged to be the most comfortable, and probably the most effective, candidate on television, he appears to prefer the interview format to anything that smacks of a performance for the cameras.

For one thing, Mr. Reagan and his staff feel that he is most effective in such settings or when answering questions from audiences after his speeches. For another, he apparently still believes that as a former actor he must prove he is "Presidential."

As for the more leisurely pace of his campaign days, Mr. Reagan's aides say that they tried heavier schedules in the New Hampshire and Florida primaries, even including frequent "media events," and "it just didn't work."

It was commonly accepted by those close to the campaign in Florida, which Mr. Reagan lost, that he was often tired and jumpy and that his style suffered for it.

"Besides," one campaign spokesman said, "he really works in get up for his speeches and they drain him. Shaking hands all day would be a lot easier for him."

Reagan Gets 46 Delegates in Five States

By The Associated Press

Ronald Reagan made gains during the weekend that will keep him ahead of President Ford in the delegate count, regardless of what happens in the Maryland and Michigan primaries on Tuesday.

Mr. Reagan picked up support Saturday from a total of 46 delegates to the Republican National Convention, while Mr. Ford gained 8.

[Mr. Reagan now has 476 delegates, to 333 for Mr. Ford, according to a New York Times tabulation.]

[Until this weekend there was at least a statistical chance that Mr. Ford could be ahead after Tuesday's primaries. But now, even if the President were to win all 43 Republican delegates at stake in Maryland, and all 84 to be selected on the basis of the Michigan voting, he would still trail Mr. Reagan.]

Mr. Reagan picked up 18 delegates votes Saturday in Oklahoma, 12 in Missouri, 9 in Louisiana, 5 in Virginia and 3 in Minnesota. Mr. Ford gained 6 in Missouri and 2 in Virginia. The Minnesota selection process will be completed at a state convention.

For the Democrats, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia received eight delegate votes Saturday in New Mexico. That gives him 604 of the 1,505 delegates needed for the nomination, according to The Times tabulation.]

Support for Reagan
SEATTLE, May 16 (UPI)—Ronald Reagan has the support of a majority of the delegates who will attend the state Republican convention on June 18 in the state of Washington, according to results from conventions in the state's 39 counties.

The counties of Douglas, Ferry, Klickitat, Whitman and Yakima completed the selection of delegates yesterday.

A poll of county chairmen in those five counties, added to earlier results, showed Mr. Reagan with at least 715, for 61 percent, of the 1,164 delegates to the state convention. Mr. Ford had at least 284 delegates and there were 45 listed as uncommitted. Twenty others were not classified.

All of the county delegations are officially uncommitted going into the state convention, which will be held in Spokane. And the 38 delegates that the state will send to the Republican National Convention will be officially uncommitted.

Carter as Governor Had Activist Term

much more responsive to the needs of the people," he says. "I'm proud, really very proud of it there—and come up with the sprawling, venerable bureaucracy.

These days, as he campaigns for the Presidency, he says there were more than 300 government agencies when he began his reorganization project in 1971. When it was over, he says, only 22 remained. "A lot of money was made possible the savings of millions of dollars in administrative costs, we made the whole operation much more efficient and much more responsive to the needs of the people," he says. "I'm proud, really very proud of that."

There are those in this old capital city who dispute the merits that claim, including Mr. Matthews, who is admittedly partisan, and Ernest Davis, the state auditor, who says he is unbiased.

According to Mr. Devie, the economic savings Mr. Carter says resulted from his restructuring of the government have never appeared on his own balance sheets.

Never Saw Savings

"I suppose there are certain ways to figure this and not figure that—you know, take a little bit here and leave a little bit there—and come up with the numbers you want," he said. "But in strict accounting terms, I've got to say that I never saw all those savings, any time." Mr. Carter's allies in state government estimate that his reorganization resulted in savings of at least $45 million in the first year and around $30 million in the years that followed.

But several long-time capital figures question the effects of the reorganization, scoffing at Mr. Carter's appraisal of it as a "radical piece of surgery that restored the patient's health."

Mr. Matthews called the program nothing more than a "cosmetic rearrangement of the furniture," and other critics who asked out to be identified (the more popular Mr. Carter becomes as a Presidential candidate the fewer Georgians there are who will talk on the record) were more or less agreed.

Cites Adversaries

Mr. Carter concedes that there were certain final weaknesses in the reorganization of the state government, but he insists that they resulted from his own lack of vision or understanding but rather from the work of his adversaries in the bureaucracy and in the legislature.

"They fought me all the way," he remembers—and that recollection, according to an account of many others, is accurate.

The legislature, a traditionally stiff-necked body of conservatives, opposed him at almost every turn, not only in the dramatic struggle over reorganization but also on almost every other proposal he made.

It was bitter, brutal political combat with Mr. Carter on one side and Lester G. Maddox, the segregationist Lieutenant Governor who was Mr. Carter's predecessor, on the other.

"There was a great deal of blood," recalls Jody Powell, the candidate's press secretary. Mr. Carter himself concedes that he "twisted a lot of arms" in behalf of his programs. Mr. Matthews recalls that the Governor seemed to "enjoy the bloodletting."

Eventual Victory

But that period is also remembered here for Mr. Carter's eventual victory. He had promised in his 1970 campaign to make wholesale changes in the structure of the government, and when he reached office he hammered out an unusual "reverse veto" plan for the project that ultimately became law.

He asked for and got the authority to order revisions in the state government with the stipulation that the legislature could then veto such a measure. Traditionally, the veto is the executive's prerogative, but Mr. Carter reasoned that nothing substantive would happen if each of his planned changes had to emerge from a separate piece of legislation. Now, he is promising that if he is nominated and elected President, that is what he will propose to Congress—a reverse veto that would allow him to make executive orders regarding the Federal bureaucratic structure and provide Congress with the power to veto individual changes.

"We really fought that," Mr. Matthews, the House speaker, recalled, "but Carter had enough friends over here to run it through—and those who weren't his friends, he put the fear of the Lord in them and they came around."

But the Governor is also recalled as a man who could be persuasive without being threatening.

Throughout the long fight over reorganization, he is said to have met three and four times a day—over breakfast and lunch in his office and supper and drinks at the stately Governor's mansion—with members of the legislature, wheeling them, cajoling them and in some cases "preaching to them," and in many cases, winning them over.

In the end, the reorganization became the showpiece of his administration. He had brought to the task a large group of men and women chosen from business, industry and the campus, and he had driven them mercilessly, establishing what seemed to be impossible deadlines for their work.

"But the important thing is that he was right there with us, working just as hard, digging just as deep into every little problem," one member of that force recalls. "It was his program and he worked on it as hard as anybody, and the final product was distinctly his."

During that period, however, an important part of Governor Carter's own demeanor came to light. He once tried to reach the state's civil defense office to ask its help in finding a lost child. He was unable to find anyone to speak for the civil defense office and so he reorganized it, insisting that the office be placed directly under his control.

Everyone in his administration argued against it, but the Governor was adamant.

"No, this is the way it's got to be," he was quoted by a staff member. Eventually, he relented but only after inordinately large amounts of time and energy had been spent in dissuading him.

His stubborn, that's true," says Mr. Powell, the one aide who is thought to be closest to Mr. Carter, but Mr. Powell means, there are a lot of things he doesn't feel strongly about, either way, but once he makes up his mind on something—and that's no simple process—then, generally, that's it."

Decided to Run

And, soon after the 1972 Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach, which produced Senators George McGovern and Thomas F. Eagleton as the party's slate, Mr. Carter set his mind to run for President in 1976. He had been Governor for about a year and a half and he had been at least moderately successful with many of his projects; but once he decided to make 1976 a primary goal in his life, the weighty job of Governor, as he recalls, "fell off his shoulders" and he quit being Governor.

It was as though he was bored by the routine of the office, recalls an associate, no longer on his staff. "I don't mean he quit being Governor—that's absolutely out of the case—but the demands in the office were just that for him: demands."

Others in the capital recalled that there seems to be a distinct absence of leadership in the Governor's office during the last year and a half or so of his term.

"Maddox just took over," said one of Mr. Carter's old friends. "I was very disappointed, even though I thought I knew what was happening."

Mr. Maddox himself more or less concurs.

"Carter was a very hard man to deal with for a while," he remembered recently, "but after a while, I didn't have to deal with him at all. Seemed like he just disappeared. He would veto this or veto that once every so often, but the last part of his term was very different from the first part."

The former aide views all of that as an affirmative side of Mr. Carter.

Many More Blacks

"He had the Presidency on his mind that's true," he says. "But he had no intention of sloughing off his job as Governor, and he did not. He worked just as hard, and I suppose as a matter of conscience, maybe he worked even harder at being Governor after he decided to run for President. And, in the process, he put together a record that has become, for him, at least—the premise of his Presidential campaign. Those who watched it happening then now recall it as a matter of will, or personal discipline and determination."

He increased the number of black appointees on major state boards and agencies from three in 1971 to 53 when he left office; he raised the number of black state employees from 4,850 to 6,834, and he staged a purposely dramatic hanging of a portrait of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in the rotunda of the state Capitol—where only a few years before Mr. Maddox as Governor had sat stolidly in his office, ringed by cordons of state troopers, while the civil rights leader's coffin was borne through the streets of Atlanta.

Governor Carter proposed and saw passed a "sunshine law" that opened to the public and to reporters many official government meetings previously held in private. The Southern Regional Council called it a "model," although others viewed it as a rather halfhearted effort that allowed too many loopholes to make it very effective.

As Governor, he called for and got a tax rebate in 1973 of about $30 million. The next year he vetoed the same piece of legislation, deciding that it benefited public utilities and large property owners more than the low income people he said he had intended it to help.

Not without a temper, he called the 1972 legislature the "worst" in Georgia's history and termed its deliberations "an absolute victory for every selfish interest and lobbyist that ever set foot in the capital." By then, the legislators were accustomed to his temper.

"We used to call him 'Jungle Jimmy,'" one of them recalled brought to the task a large

Ford Ends 3-Day Appeal For Support in Michigan

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

SAGINAW, Mich., May 18—President Ford, which endorsed him day. But it is expected that he should be elected to a full term in office because he deserves it. President Ford ended today his personal campaigning for support in Tuesday's Michigan primary.

Mr. Ford has spent three of the last five days in his home state trying to turn back the rising tide of support for his challenger, Ronald Reagan. The urgency of Mr. Ford's campaign suggests that he believes the outcome in Michigan will have a major impact on his political future.

Today, after going to church in Grand Rapids, his hometown, Mr. Ford came here to Saginaw to make his speech of the day to the township's Bicentennial Park. The speech, although only 10 minutes long, was a comprehensive distillate of most of the slogans, catchwords, one-liners and other appeals he has been honing during his recent campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination.

These are some of the things he said: "When I was sworn in, I said our long national nightmare was over. And it is." "As I did not seek this office, neither did I shirk it." "I didn't panic."

Veto Power

"If it proves necessary, I will hold this nation on its course to full economic recovery by using my veto power again and again and again."

"I have followed a course that has led us to rising prosperity, recovered trust and a lasting peace."

"My Administration has been as honest, as open and as candid as I can make it and so is my campaign for the high office I hold."

"I want to lead our country away from a wasteful preoccupation with what's wrong with America and get on with the job of making things right with America."

"A government big enough to give you everything you want is a government big enough to take from you everything you have."

His aides have been seeking to develop a basic 10-minute speech and today's address is likely to be its prototype.

No Dropout

However, if Mr. Ford loses on Tuesday, particularly if he loses badly, he may not be doing that much more active campaigning. None of his aides have suggested that he will drop out of the race if he loses here, but almost all of them have conceded that such a loss would have grave consequences for the rest of the campaign.

Mr. Ford has the support of most of the state's elected Republican officials and much of the press, including The Detroit News and The Detroit Free party from the bottom.

Back in Washington

WASHINGTON, May (UPI)—About 200 to 300 sons, including Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, other Cabinet officers, were here at Andrews Air Force Base for Mr. Ford's rehome tonight. They applauded as he left Air Force 1 to automobile ride to a Vir suburb for a fund-raising party.

WEICKER DESCRIBES A G.O.P. 'PREAKNI

Sen. Lowell P. We Jr., Republican of Connecticut, said today that if Ronald Reagan defeated President Ford in the Michigan primary, the public party would have political "Preakness" or hands in which both candidates turned themselves out for the race's finish.

In that event, The Associated Press quoted the Senator saying, other Republicans should enter the race; their party's nomination among those Mr. Weicker said as possibilities.

Senators Howard H. Baker of Tennessee, Edward Brooke of Massachusetts, Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland.

The reference to the Preakness was to the race yesterday in which the two favored horses tied after a record drop in the early running, a long shot overtook them.

Mr. Weicker said that former Gov. Reagan of Iowa were to lead the Republican ticket in November clearly would destroy chaos we have to rebul party from the bottom.

Ford Ends 3-Day 'Thumb' of Michigan, Fervor for the Primary Is Not Red Hot For Support in Michigan Presidential Primary—indeed, the whole world of politics—seems very far away here in the thumb section of President Ford's home state.

Kulish, a farmer from Uby, Mich. Though he has reservations over "this Nixon pardon and stuff like that," he will vote for President Ford tomorrow.

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS Special to The New York Times

UBLY, Mich., May 15—The Michigan Presidential primary—indeed, the whole world of politics—seems very far away here in the thumb section of President Ford's home state. This is farming country, an off-the-track land of flat, buff-colored fields made fresh and bright at this time of year by lightly greening trees and alternating carpets of brilliant yellow dandelions. Jutting out of Michigan's eastern flank into Lake Huron, it gets its name because it is the "thumb" of the " mitten" formed by lower Michigan on the map.

And it is home to a classic variety of American voter: the conservative, but not radical, rural, small-town Midwestern Republican. It is a group that President Ford is counting on desperately in his drive to avoid embarrassment and possible defeat at the hands of Ronald Reagan in Tuesday's primary. Mr. Ford cannot take these voters for granted, as he once might have. Although they are Michiganans, the President has never before sought their vote. His old Congressional district lies clear across the state. Edward Kulish, 74 years old, is one of those voters. Yesterday he was encountered by visitors in a field by the side of Route 19, just south of Uby. He was opening bags of fertilizer and emptying them into a tractor-drawn corn planter. Warm, caressing breezes pushed slightly threatening clouds across the sky, and Mr. Kulish was much more concerned about whether it would rain on his planting operation than about the political questions he was about to be asked. That is the way it is around here. Hurt and confused by what some see as a betrayal at the hands of Richard M. Nixon, many of the Thumb's voters seem almost repelled by matters political. "I used to be more excited [about politics]," Mr. Kulish said. "I think I had more faith in who I believed in. Today you get let down right and left, and you can't know what to think." But he says he will vote on Tuesday. For President Ford. "I've got reservations," he said, eyeing the sky, "but I'll still go along with him." What reservations? "Oh, this Nixon pardon and stuff like that." But Mr. Ford had done a good job, over-all? "Yes, well, I guess you can't do everything right." What about Ronald Reagan? "Well, what have I got to go by, to form an opinion?" Does the fact that Mr. Ford comes from Michigan mean anything? "No, nothing at all." Mr. Ford's support in these parts—and it appears to be considerable—seems to be mostly of the Kulish variety: barely warm, born almost out of inertia, reflecting the built-in advantage of incumbency in a traditionally Republican stronghold. Almost everyone you ask expects Mr. Ford to do well in the Thumb. The common perception, not only here but in more urbane Republican enclaves such as some of Detroit's suburbs, seems to be, as one voter put it, that Mr. Ford "hasn't done anything great, but he hasn't messed up, either."

Conservatives Seem Unconcerned by Political Issues

From the Republican Party establishment to an Uby High School social studies class, those who have made any serious attempt to gauge voter preference expect Mr. Ford to defeat Mr. Reagan handily here in Huron County, at the tip of the Thumb. 60 to 70% G.O.P. Ed Moore, the county Republican chairman, expects that 60 to 70 percent of the vote cast on Tuesday will be in the Republican column, and that Mr. Ford will get 60 to 70 percent of the Republican vote. (The county party organization has backed neither candidate.) Mr. Moore expects that Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia, and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama will share the Democratic vote about equally. Based on a countywide turnout of 5,000 votes in Tuesday's wide-open cross-over primary (roughly equal to the turnout in the 1972 primary), that would give President Ford between 35 and 50 percent of all votes cast in Huron County, Mr. Reagan 20 to 30 percent, and

Mr. Carter and Mr. Wallace 15 to 20 percent each. Four years ago, Governor Wallace, at the high-water mark of his perennial drive for the Presidency, got 41 percent of the vote here. Many Republicans crossed party lines to vote for him, shattering a stranglehold that had enabled the Republicans always to carry Huron County by better than 2 to 1.

Weakling Hold That stranglehold may be permanently weakened. More and more of the Thumb's voters, like Clarence Ventline, describe themselves as independents. Mr. Ventline, the general manager of a grain elevator in Kinde, north of here, says Mr. Ford "hasn't done the job," and is trying to decide whether to vote for Mr. Carter or Mr. Reagan. The surge toward independence goes only so far, however. In the 1972 primary, for example, at the height of the Wallace tide, Richard Nixon polled 1,924 votes in Huron County—20 percent of the total cast—in an election in which he was essentially unopposed.

That probably represents the hard core of Republican loyalists. And among those loyalists, as well as others, to be Republican seems to be equated with voting for the party's leader. So President Ford seems strong hereabout. Down in Argyle, south on Route 19, Gerald King says he will vote for Mr. Ford "because I think he's a man; he do'nt pull no punches." In Bad Axe, the Huron County seat, a fertilizer salesman says that Mr. Ford "has done all right," that he likes the President's stance on "promising what you can deliver and delivering what you promise." He wishes Mr. Ford were a little more forceful in foreign affairs, and recognizes that Mr. Reagan appeals to that wish. But to him, Mr. Reagan is "just a movie star" who "can't do it" in foreign policy matters. And in Pinnebog, Bob Heck, the owner of Heck's bar used to hear lots of political talk from the farmers who stop in. But this election, he said, "there's nothing." There's talk about prices and inflation, yes. But not politics. It's that kind of year in the Thumb. THE FRESH AIR FUND 1877-1977

Finds It Hard, Even in Own State, Convey Vision That Inspires Voters

W. APPLE Jr. The New York Times Mich. May 16—A crowd had drifted to the Presidential Express here yesterday to continue his whistle-stop tour of southern Michigan, only a few hardy, rain-soaked remnants remained to see Mr. Ford, fighting for political survival in a few 20th-century towns where he was one of a single voter. A lone figure, the mist arched and slipped station, "for that day." It was almost invisible most of those who turned to their cars. But the voice of Mr. Ford over their heads, the Presidential powerful public address: "Vote on Tuesday." A poignant moment on that day, a day on which President—the Richard M. Nixon of the most powerful "free world" self required to his own party, state, not to turn to him.

never mentioned his opponent, nor did anyone else. But American Presidents have always been expected to articulate some vision of the future, to articulate, even if that goal is imperfectly expressed, and perhaps dimly understood, by the electorate. Mr. Ford, in the view of many Republican politicians who have thought deeply about his problems, has found that hard to do, and he did not do it yesterday. Here in Lansing, for example, he claimed credit for a restoration of faith in the Presidency, for progress on economic problems and for presiding over an end to Vietnam. There was nothing, however, about what kind of society he hoped to build in the nation, or the world—not even any sliver of a "new frontier" or a "generation at peace." Nothing to compare with Mr. Reagan's vision of a newly hard-nosed Administration in Washington, determined to defend American honor abroad and the public purse at home. It is that lack, a number of Republicans have begun to conclude, that has imperiled the President, far more than the shortcomings of his staff or his rival's television skills or election-law technicalities that permit crossover voting. Most analysts expect him to win here. He lost only narrowly in neighboring Indiana, after all, and that is a more conservative state than this, with a similar crossover potential and without the incentive to support a native son. The upstart, plummy prestige in the aftermath of defeats in Indiana and three other states. "I'm worried," said a prominent Michigan Republican, standing along the Grand Trunk tracks at Durand, "that Ford or a generation at peace, and then have to fight so hard at the convention that the nomination won't be worth anything. What did the Greeks call it? A Pyrrhic victory?"

Women From 30 States Carry E.R.A. Fight to Land of Lincoln

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL.
SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 16
—About 8,000 supporters of the equal rights amendment from 30 states—from Maine to California—convened in front of a statue of Abraham Lincoln here today and rallied for passage of a 24-word-long addition to the United States Constitution that one speaker called part of the "second American revolution."

steps of the State Capitol to pressure the Illinois State Senate to become the 35th state to ratify the amendment. Supporters contended that passage in Illinois could have a spillover effect on neighboring states like Indiana and Missouri, which have not yet acted on the amendment. A total of 38 states are needed before the E.R.A. can become the 27th amendment to the Constitution. Ratification has been stalled in the Illinois Senate for more than a year and supporters of the amendment need six more State Senate votes in the current session to assure passage. The Illinois House ratified the amendment last year. The two-and-a-half-hour rally was peppered with the crowd-pleasing speeches, exhortations, historical footnotes and telegraphed pledges of support from a broad spectrum of politicians ranging from Presidential aspirants such as Gerald Ford, Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona and ex-Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia to Senators such as Charles H. Percy, Republican of Illinois, and Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota. A Plane Overhead While the crowd was warmed up with tunes from the civil rights and antiwar movements of the 1960's—equipped with new lyrics germane to women's rights—a plane buzzed the Capitol building trailing a long streamer. The streamer said: "Illinois women oppose E.R.A.—libbers go home." Its bee-like raspings as it circled the ornate domed Capitol building did little to interfere with the heavily amplified oratory delivered in front of a contemplative statue of Lincoln that looked down on the speakers. "I'm not a betting woman but I've got a $20 bill here that says that the pilot of that plane ain't no woman," said Sheila Lulkin, a teacher and union official, as the crowd roared. The Lincoln figure was draped with a banner emblazoned with the simple words of the proposed constitutional amendment: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex." The participants convened on a cool spring day in what is normally a sleepy Sunday in this state capital. One contingent of about 500 women had started out on Friday from New York,

Washington and other points east. They went by train to Chicago and then by bus to Springfield. The train journey was, in part, a tribute to a cross-country rail caravan made by suffragists in 1917 when they were seeking the right to vote. Sally Campbell, a member of the New York Library Guild, a branch of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said: "The train ride was tremendous. We even had a children's car." Pat Benjamin, who identified herself as "a housewife from Staten Island with two children," said that she and her friend, Susan Gorbaty, had "a great fantastic trip" with lots of camaraderie and singing. The signs were prolific and varied, ranging from whimsical ("Lactators for E.R.A.") to militant ("A Middle Class Housewife is a Husband Away From Welfare"). Like the songs, the chants echoed the street protests of the 60's. "What do we want? Equal rights. When do we want them? Now," went one. "Hey, hey, what do you say. Ratify the E.R.A.," went another. The march started out along the city's oarby deserted downtown—passing by a house that was Lincoln's home when he lived in Springfield, and proceeded to the brilliant greenward that carpets the exterior of the Capitol building.

Simplified Art Deco

Lacquered buffet-hutch, left, at John Mascheroni, $4,165. Chrome chair upholstered in gray wool, $664, at Bloomingdale's. Bookcase, c. 1930, is $2,500, from Alan Moss.

By LISA HAMMILL
It remains to be seen whether the current revival of Art Deco furniture styles is just a temporary touch of nostalgia, or a salute to the permanent validity of those styles. In any case, they're with us again. Today, you can walk into a number of department stores or decorator showrooms and see something that, even in a pared-down version, immediately reminds you of Radio City Music Hall. Or, if the style has captured you and you want the real thing, you can go to one of the increasing number of period Art Deco dealers or shops.

The colored glass coffee table, above, is $960, at Paul M. Jones.

What you'll be seeing in the stores, however, are largely adaptations of the American version of that period. Europe, since before World War I, had been in a ferment of experimental activity in the decorative and applied arts. But in this country all that time, we were clinging to reproductions of other centuries. By the 20's, however, American urban architecture and industrial design were making great leaps forward. We were building taller and taller skyscrapers, and the automobile had already become the great American necessity. We had fallen in love with speed, with soaring spatial compression, and with the machine. But it wasn't until almost 1930 that we got around to noticing modern design for the home, prodded by some museums and department-store exhibitions, a few effective designer-proselytizers and ultimately, by the movies. And by then, we were ready to design in our own idiom. And how did we design our own Art Deco furniture? For one thing, it was beautifully engineered. Even in mass-produced pieces, the quality was often notable. There was an imaginative use of old materials—exotically grained wood veneers, lacquer finishes, mirror-covered furniture—and experimentation with such new materials as bakelite, plastics and chromed metal. As to design itself, it was clear we were enchanted with geometric form. Our fascination with speed and streamlining was reflected in emphatic horizontal lines; our interest in our tall buildings was echoed in strong vertical lines. Bookcases, bar cabinets, chests jutted up and out at sharp angles.

But we were also concerned with spatial rhythms and harmony. Corners were rounded, or entire pieces were a curving flow. Asymmetry was one of the most notable features of the period, but it was an asymmetry that subtly balanced itself out in line and counterline. There was also great interest in the play of light and shadow, in the relation of form and function, in the paring away of unessential detail. It was furniture that, in comparison to older designs, was austere—and yet exuberant. What is the difference between the actual pieces of the period and today's adaptations? Simplification. Asymmetry is suggested rather than emphatic. The roundedness may now be just one continuous curving line. Woods are more in today's taste, and new synthetic materials are being used. But one can still find contemporary adaptations covered in mirror or painted with a peach color or flamboyant with zigzags and zags. You can find groups or individual pieces of modern Art Deco at Bloomingdale's, Aluma's and Lord & Taylor.

Among the decorator showrooms that offer individual signs offers a sizable selection in mirror finishes. All of these showrooms are in the Decoration and Design building at 979 Third Avenue (near 59th Street), except Karl Springer, which is at 306 East 61st Street. You need a decorator or architect to visit them. Among the shops carrying period Art Deco furniture, both American and European, are the following: Art Deco, 972 Second Avenue (near 51st Street); Bolero, 204 East 31st Street; Deco Boutique, 149 East 60th Street; Carol Ferranti, 888 Madison Avenue (72d Street); Galeria, 201 East 31st Street; Galerie Gerard, 49 East 10th Street; Joia, 1142 Second Avenue (60th Street); Alan Moss, 20 East 17th Street (you have to call first for an appointment); Lillian Nassau, 220 East 57th Street; and Primavera, 808 Madison Avenue (68th Street). The pieces at these places are of varying quality, and some dealers are better able to identify or document the furniture than others. In any case, whether you're going to buy an adaptation or a piece from the period, you may be surprised at how modern many of these works look. adaptations of Art Deco are John Mascheroni, Paul M. Jones, Cy Mann, Louis Maslow and Karl Springer. Designs in metal has a large group of metal Art Deco pieces and Tomorrow De-

Varied Participants The participants were also varied. There were contingents representing lesbian groups, housewives, church groups, labor unions, the Socialist Workers Party, Democratic and Republican speakers were heard. The nationwide turnout, said Mary Jean Collins, chairman of the National Rally for Equal Rights, was "a sign we can tolerate the pain of inequality no longer—no state has the E.R.A. until America has the E.R.A." "During our Bicentennial year when we are celebrating when we are making history," said Gov. Daniel Walker, a Democrat. Karso DeCrow, president of the National Organization for Women, told the cheering throng: "We must hold men responsible in the caucuses, in the committees, in the bathrooms, in the barrooms." Whence the Reuben? Omaha, It Seem

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE
In a recent column, we spoke with some rapture of the Reuben sandwich, that grilled, multicolored modern classic made with dark bread, corned beef, sauerkraut and cheese. We stated wistfully we would be pleased to learn the origin of the dish. That wish provided us with an abundance of letters, most of them pinpointing 1956 as the year the sandwich gained national prominence. We have traced the history to the sponsors of the National Sandwich Contest held in that year. The following treatise, from the National Kraut Packers Association, explains all and includes the original winning recipe for the sandwich: "The Reuben sandwich, submitted by a waitress, Fern Snider of Omaha, took first place honors in the 1956 National Sandwich Contest. Since that year, the sandwich has steadily grown to its now acclaimed popularity. Today practically every restaurant, club and diner in the country features a version of the Reuben. "The idea originated from one of Miss Snider's employers, the Schimmel family, who has operated the Blackstone Hotel in Omaha for years. During 1920-1935, Bernard Schimmel's father belonged to a weekly poker group. Fixing their own sandwiches became the most enjoyed weekly 'feast' on these poker nights. One player, a wholesale grocer named Reubeno Kay, devised the combination of kraut, corned beef and Swiss on rye. Thus, in honor its 'founder,' the Reuben was named. "Bernard Schimmel, a retired European-trained chef, says the secret of the Reuben is in its bread. It should be fresh pumpernickel, preferably the sourdough kind. The sauerkraut should be crisp, chilled and well drained. At the Blackstone, he explains, only the best ingredients are selected—that is, rich homemade Russian dressing, Emmentaler Swiss cheese, and kosher-styled corned beef that has been trimmed well and sliced very thin. Assembling the Reuben is an 'art' too. Schimmel puts corned beef on one slice of pumpernickel, Swiss cheese on the other. Next, he tops one side of the sandwich with a thick layer of kraut mixed with dressing. Then he either butters and quickly grills it or serves it cold without the butter. If grilled, he believes the sandwich should be hot on the outside, cold on the inside. The perfect garnishes are chilled, half-cured dill pickles."

1. Combine the sauerkraut, onion and parsley. Toss until well mixed.
 2. Spread Russian dressing on each slice of bread. Top eight slices of bread with corned beef, cheese and sauerkraut. Top with remaining bread.
 3. Lightly butter both sides of the sandwiches. Grill slowly until cheese melts and bread browns.
- Yield: Eight sandwiches.
Note: To make creamy Russian dressing, blend half a cup of mayonnaise with a quarter of a cup of chili sauce.

Although we are persuaded that the above is the true origin of the Reuben sandwich that we have indulged in on many occasions and the sandwich we had in mind when we pondered its origins, we also received a letter from Patricia R. Taylor of Manhattan, who says that her father, the late Arnold Reuben, was the originator of all Reuben sandwiches. Arnold Reuben was, of course, the proprietor for many years of the now-defunct and well-remembered Reuben restaurant on 59th Street. "We feel obliged in all fairness to reprint portions of Mrs. Taylor's letter: "I am prompted to write concerning your search for the original Reuben sandwich. Your search is never: Here I am, the daughter of the horse's mouth. "My father . . . for over 40 odd years made his restaurant an institution in New York. To quote Damon Runyon, 'Reuben has always been famous for his sandwiches, which are regular productions, not just slabs of bread with things between them. For years it has been Arnold's custom to apply to these masterpieces of the sandwich architect's skill the names of persons of more or less notoriety in our fair city.' "I would like to share with you the story of the first Reuben's Special and what went into it. "Make Me a Sandwich" "The year was 1914. Late one evening a leading lady of

Charlie Chaplin at the restaurant Reuben, make me a sandwich, I'm hungry, I'm brick." "He took a loaf of bread, cut two slabs and stacked with sliced baked ham, sliced roasted sliced imported St. topped it off with and lots of Reuben Russian dressing; and slice of bread cut bread made wiches a sandwich. "He served it who said, 'Gee, it is the best sandwich I've ever ate. You ought to Annette Seelos' which he replied, 'I'll call it Special.'" Let us compare that Arnold Reuben sandwich genius, forerunner of what served coast to coast Reuben sandwich coincidence for the wholesale Omaha.

Bridge: Sweden Replaces Britain As Leader in Monte Carlo

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Special to The New York Times

MONTE CARLO, Monaco, May 16 — The United States made no gain in play at the World Team Olympiad here today, but Sweden overtook Britain at the head of the standings. The Americans won two matches narrowly, 14-6 against Jamaica and 12-8 against Australia, but then suffered an unexpected disaster, losing 0-20 to South Africa.

However, most of the other teams had their problems. The British, who were unbeaten for four days, lost matches to Indonesia, Canada and Yugoslavia. The brilliant young Swedish team won 39 points of a possible 40 in its first two matches, but was then blitzed by Ireland.

It was a successful day, however, for the Italians, the defending champions, who scored 57 points of a possible 60 and seem poised to move into the lead.

United States 10th

The leaders after the 26th of the 48 rounds were: Sweden, 388; Italy, 387; Britain, 382; Poland, 364; Brazil, 355; France, 350. The United States is 10th with 324 points.

In the women's championship the United States started the day in second place but dropped to third by losing, 6-14, to Spain.

The standings after 12 rounds were: Italy, 181; Britain, 166; United States and Canada, 157 each; Denmark, 148; France, 147.

A deal from the American matches against Jamaica today provided a textbook example of cross-ruffing technique. Erik Paulsen of Los Angeles, sitting South, showed his hearts and diamonds in turn when East opened with a natural bid of two clubs. He reached a sound contract of five diamonds and received a club lead and continuation.

Heart Ace Played

He now began the cross-ruff, knowing that he wanted to ruff three hearts in the dummy. After the heart ace and a ruff, he discarded a heart on the spade ace.

He then ruffed a spade and ruffed another heart with the diamond ace, the key play. A ruff with the jack would have allowed East to overruff and play a trump to defeat the contract since South would have been left with a heart loser.

Paulsen then ruffed a spade with the diamond king, guarding against an unlikely overruff on his left, and ruffed his last heart with the diamond jack. The defenders were welcome to take the diamond queen whenever they pleased, but the contract was safe.

This effort did not produce any profit for the Americans, however. In the replay, Jamaica reached five diamonds and Bill Eisenberg, the American West, led a trump.

This was the right idea, aimed at stopping the cross-ruff, but South was safely home with six trump tricks in his hand, two ruffs, and three winners in the side suits.

Methodists in Britain Urge Strict Rules on Exorcising

LONDON, May 16 (Reuters) —Stringent guidelines for ministers exorcising evil spirits are recommended in a Methodist church study published here.

A report prepared for the Methodist conference next month says that ministers should not rush into exorcisms when the "possessed" person is in a highly excited state.

It also says that doctors, psychiatrists and social workers and other ministers should be kept informed throughout the treatment.

All British churches examined the exorcism service after a man who had become fascinated by exorcism killed his wife, believing she was possessed by evil spirits. The man is now in a prison mental hospital.

Last week the Church of Scotland came out against exorcism.

Tally on Soviet Emigration Shows Drop of 3,600 in '75

GENEVA, May 16 (Reuters) —About 3,600 fewer people were allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union last year than in 1974, according to the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration.

A spokesman for the Geneva-based organization said Soviet authorities gave 13,233 people permission to emigrate, about 8,400 of them to Israel, compared with a total of around 16,900 in 1974.

After a two-day executive meeting here, the committee said it would become active in steps to ease restrictions on European migration to enable families to reunite.

The Times
Man Who Came to Dinner

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

HECK The Wit, World and Life of Alexander Woolcott. By Howard Teichmann. 334 pages. Illustrated. Morrow.

A generation too young to have been by the tidal wave of "violet" that is said to have surged under Woolcott from the 1920's to the 1940's, I have never understood the fuss was about. He was, of course, New York City's most influential when daily theater journalism commanded. He was the leading light of the Algonquin Round Table, a group of wit and wit-wit who came down to us from the observations on the theater to be read and savored. Most of the biographies of the "Theater" are the years with Gillian Hellman's "Pentimento" undefined in the back-tankerous hoh.

With curiosity that I read the Wit, World and Life of Woolcott, by Howard Teichmann, professor at Columbia, co-author of "The Solid Gold Cadillac," author of "An Intimate Portrait" who, if he didn't know Woolcott, has interviewed over 100 people who did. But there is not us here. Mr. Teichmann is a sort of assembly-line biographer that would suit as well any one of a people of the period.

Chapter called "Safe for Discover World War I" ("The it all came in the spring of other called—are you ready? Old Lady in Dubuque" to ending of The New Yorker which Woolcott wrote the "Shouts and Murmurs." We half shares of major psycho- (Woolcott was not homo- have suspected; he had a monal defect that retarded e), which are based on the several "foremost" psycho- schman interviewed, plus ment in Woolcott's life with Loos, in which he con- secret wish in life was to

We get any number of padded paragraphs—on everything from the function of a radio sound studio to the life story of Woolcott's boss at The New York Times, Adolph S. Ochs, (not that Ochs's vita isn't pertinent; it just seems odd to be told it, while we are awaiting his response to a query from his managing editor, Carr Van Anda). We get a chronology of Woolcott's major accomplishments as he grew from a news reporter (who covered the sinking of the Titanic for The Times) to an ambassador of iron will (he broadcast encouraging messages to the English people before America had entered World War II). We get the names of all Woolcott's famous friends.

Otherwise, it's left pretty much up to Woolcott to put his extraordinary personality across, and in doing so Woolcott falls pretty flat. In an introductory chapter in which the young Helen Hayes steps out on the town with the great critic, Mr. Teichmann mentions Woolcott's skill as a conversationalist and "the force with which he expressed himself," and then offers the following summary: "Had [Miss Hayes] seen Beatrice Lillie and Gertrude Lawrence in 'Charlot's Revue'? At an Actors' Fund Matinee, had she read what he'd written about it? She surely had. In the Sunday paper as well? Oh my, yes. Did she know anything about tonight's opening? Noel Coward's 'Hay Fever'? A great success in London./Dear Noel."

Some Used Parkerisms
As an illustration of Woolcott's deep concern for "surgical accuracy" in language, we are given a radio speech in which Woolcott distinguished between the meanings of "prone" and "supine." The samples of wit are either flat or other people's, including several Dorothy Parkerisms so used that they have lost their bounce. (The most amusing remark in the book is Harpo Marx's description of Woolcott as "something that got loose from Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade," and some of you have heard that one before.) The ultimate insight into Woolcott's character is the not unusual intelligence that behind his frascible exterior lay a heart of pure mush. (This was put best by The New Yorker after Woolcott died, in a "Notes and Comments" that concluded: "We are glad we knew him well, for he was a most uncomfortable man to know slightly.")

Was there more to Alexander Woolcott than meets the eye in Mr. Teichmann's mostly insipid biography? To judge from Woolcott's remarks and writings, one suspects not. Yet you have to credit him for his taste and enthusiasm, for he seems to have discovered Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, the Marx Brothers, and Fred and Adele Astaire, among others, not to speak of the comic (as opposed to juggling) talents of W. C. Fields; and at the peak of his influence he was capable of attracting a vast popular audience to the plays and books he admired. In short, he had something that appealed greatly to his contemporaries, and that something is simply not reflected in "Smart Aleck," if Woolcott himself does not deserve better, perhaps the period he represented does.

Alexander Woolcott as seen by William Auerbach Levy.

Sherlock Holmes has an all-star cast of suspects in The West End Horror.

George Bernard Shaw, who brought the case to Holmes in the first place, disappears under suspicious circumstances.

Oscar Wilde, one of the last people to see the first victim alive, has the best motive for wanting him dead. Ellen Terry, playing Lady Macbeth at the Lyceum, is definitely worth keeping under observation. As for Gilbert and Sullivan, there's something Sullivan hasn't told Gilbert—or Scotland Yard. But the solution to the murders of the black-mailing theater critic and the beautiful young actress is more macabre than anyone on the West End imagines.

In The Seven-Per-Cent Solution, Holmes collaborated with Sigmund Freud in a devilishly ingenious, post-Doyle novel that became a great international success. Nicholas Meyer's second "discovery" of a posthumous memoir by Dr. Watson is a suitably spectacular encore.

Evasion in Albany...

As the State Legislature rushes toward hoped-for adjournment at the end of this month, there are growing signs that the lawmakers—and the Carey Administration—are determined to sidestep two of the most critical issues facing the current session, issues that vitally affect the future of New York City and communities throughout the state, both of which were referred to in the Senate Banking Committee's report released yesterday. They are public employee pensions and rent control.

The Kinzel and Shimm commissions—one statewide, the other local—have proposed sweeping reforms to put a lid on soaring public pension costs that have doubled over the last five years to a staggering total of $3.5 billion for state and local government. Although Governor Carey has spoken favorably of proposals put forward by the state commission, headed by Otto Kinzel, neither he nor the legislative leadership has made any effort to push a reform measure that is now bottled up in committees.

Unless the Governor and the leadership act quickly, the taxpayers of New York could be stuck with added pension burdens to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars, sums that could drive some fiscally stricken communities—including this city—into bankruptcy.

Mr. Carey has also expressed concern about the city's chaotic rent control system. "The state is subsidizing a system that doesn't work," he told the Regional Plan Association last fall. "Abandonment and tax shortfalls are the results. So reform of New York City rent control is a high priority for the State Legislature... I'm committed to change."

That commitment has not been evident around the Legislature, where present indications point toward no major revamping of the rent laws this year. The most trumpeted rent legislation in town is a pro-tenant proposal sponsored by Assembly Majority Leader Albert Blumenthal and Senator Roy Goodman. The Blumenthal-Goodman bill would create a state commission to administer a statewide system of rigid controls, even more restrictive than those that are already throttling the city's housing market.

But what is desperately needed here is a program that will provide state supervision of an orderly march toward deregulation, with protection for low-income tenants through some form of rent subsidy.

Pension and rent control reform are difficult issues for politicians to confront, especially in an election year. But this is not an ordinary election year. New York State and City and other localities remain on the brink of bankruptcy despite heroic efforts to restore them to solvency. Those efforts will have been in vain unless the Governor and the Legislature have the courage to begin now to correct such fundamental problems as runaway pension costs and corrosive rent controls.

...and an Eclipse?

Threats of a gubernatorial veto have cast a shadow over hopes in Albany for a new "sunshine-law" which would require government meetings, at all levels, to be open to the public unless the unit that is meeting votes to conduct an executive session for limited, specified purposes.

New York is one of only two states—Rhode Island is the other—that have not yet moved to require that the public's business be conducted in public. Prodded by civic groups, state legislative leaders have introduced an open-meetings bill which would give New Yorkers this elementary safeguard for good government. Since the bill has been endorsed by overwhelming bipartisan majorities in both houses, it should have clear sailing through the Legislature, providing the leaders stand by their commitments.

This is not a perfect bill. There are potential weaknesses, especially in the key enforcement provisions, and omissions—party caucuses are excluded, for example—which may well have to be corrected after the law is tested in practice. But such flaws are no excuse for a veto of this long-sought reform—especially by a governor who campaigned on a platform of open government.

Governor Carey is said to be concerned about the impact of the new law on the Emergency Financial Control Board for New York City, which he heads. In fact, the secrecy with which that all-powerful new board has reached decisions vitally affecting this city's future is an example of the need for an effective law to let the people know more about the way power is exercised in their name.

Beyond the Accusations

Regardless of the outcome of the charges brought against Justice Irving H. Saypol of the State Supreme Court and Manhattan Surrogate S. Samuel DiFalco, both jurists have properly followed tradition and asked to be relieved of any new cases. The seriousness of the accusations would suggest that they step down from the bench entirely at this time. Continuity of faith in the judicial system is far more important than the inconvenience caused by assigning new judges to their pending cases.

By standing aside, Justice Saypol and Surrogate DiFalco will be able to devote their full attention to defending themselves against various charges of bribery, perjury, conspiracy and official misconduct growing out of the investigation by the special state prosecutor, Maurice H. Nadjar.

The known facts incidental to the charges require new scrutiny by administrative officials of the judicial system. For instance, the process—entirely legal—under which Justice Saypol is serving beyond his retirement age of 70 can involve favoritism of one judge over another, with all the temptations for wrongdoing that that implies. Surrogate DiFalco—and other surrogates in the city—control a great deal of patronage that is politically oriented. Should not a more open and less costly method be devised for the lucrative guardianships and other political plums assigned by the bench?

Apart from the determination of individual guilt or innocence in these cases, they raise the opportunity for ranking court officials, the Legislature and the public to review some of the obvious existing roadblocks to the faithful administration of justice.

An Anti-Busing Brief?

Solicitor General Robert Bork is reportedly urging the Justice Department to file a friend of the court brief asking the Supreme Court: (1) to overturn the Federal District Court's order in the Boston school desegregation case; and (2) to reconsider its ruling in the 1971 North Carolina case approving transportation (busing) as a remedy for unconstitutional discrimination against black schoolchildren. The recommendation is reckless, foolish and destructive.

By way of background, it should be remembered that after an extensive trial, Federal District Judge W. Arthur Garrity found that the Boston School Committee had discriminated deliberately and in violation of the Constitution against Boston's black schoolchildren over a long period of time. Consequently, prior to the opening of school in the fall of 1974, he ordered a limited integration plan including some busing. His order was upheld in the First Circuit Court of Appeals. The school year was marked by violent resistance to the order by white children and their parents.

During that year (1974-75) the school administration, at Judge Garrity's insistence, drew up a more comprehensive integration plan involving additional transportation. Once again the judge's order was upheld by the appeals court and once again there has been violent resistance to the decree. It is that second order that is now before the Supreme Court in four separate appeals. The Justice Department is considering lending support to one of them.

The Solicitor General no doubt honestly believes that he has found a legal flaw in Chief Justice Burger's opinion for a unanimous Court in the Charlotte busing case and that his amicus brief would simply constitute an effort to tidy up the constitutional law. In fact, he could hardly send as many destructive messages or do more harm to the fabric of law if he attacked the marble walls of the Supreme Court with spray paint and a crowbar.

The first message—even worse than that issued by President Ford in 1974 when he "respectfully disagreed" with Judge Garrity's original order—would be to encourage resistance to the orders of the Federal courts. The signal would simply read that if one disagrees loudly enough, throws enough bricks, breaks enough windows and injures enough people, the Justice Department ultimately will back down and ask the courts to bend the law to accommodate violent resistance to it.

A similarly destructive message would spread throughout the Federal court system, where such judicial heroes as Frank Johnson of Alabama, J. Skelly Wright of Louisiana, James B. McMillan of North Carolina, Judge Garrity himself and a host of others withstood the most intense hostility in their home communities in order to vindicate the rule of law. With very few exceptions, they have been supported in their lonely courage by all the effort and skill the Department of Justice could marshal. Such men will now be put on notice that they indulge in honor at their peril.

Black Americans will be put on notice that the Department of Justice, after reviewing the experience with Brown v. Board of Education, has concluded that there are no remedies for their rights and that the last 22 years have been nothing more than a cruel hoax.

Finally, the filing of an anti-busing brief this week would—however unjustly—be interpreted as a political move connected with the current primary campaign in the Republican Party. From every possible point of view, it would be an act of monumental folly for the United States Department of Justice to proceed in this way against the law and the Constitution.

Mr. Grimond's Task

It is an unusual politician who has enough perspective on himself to decline the almost unanimous demand by his party that he resume his leadership. But when the call from Britain's hard-pressed Liberals came to him last week, Jo Grimond accepted only on a caretaker basis—to enable the country's third party to recover from the abrupt departure of Jeremy Thorpe.

Mr. Grimond had bowed out gracefully in 1967 after making a considerable impact in his ten years as Liberal leader but failing to achieve his goal of a major election breakthrough for the once-mighty party of Gladstone, Asquith and Lloyd George. It was under Mr. Thorpe that the Liberals came closest to that will-o'-the-wisp, polling six million votes—nearly one in every five—but still winning only fourteen seats in a House of Commons of 630. With a major Liberal comeback most unlikely, can it make any difference—in Britain or elsewhere—who heads the party or even whether it survives? The record of the last twenty years indicates that the Liberals have served Britain well, ready to get out in front for overdue policies and reforms later adopted by either or both of the bigger parties.

British membership in the European Community owes much to the dogged early advocacy of the Liberals against heavy Tory and Labor opposition. Both big parties adopted Liberal ideas for industrial decentralization, for regional development and devolution. Both finally agreed to set up specialist committees of the House of Commons as an additional check on executive power, patterned at Liberal insistence on American congressional committees.

Jo Grimond's job now will be only that of restoring unity and confidence to a party shaken by Mr. Thorpe's resignation in the face of homosexual allegations. But merely to cite the record of the party, is to indicate how important Mr. Grimond's task—and the survival of the Liberals—could be for the political health of Great Britain.

Letters to the Editor

Flood Insurance: A Two-Pronged Program

To the Editor:
Your April 27 editorial "Needless Flood Victims" shows proper concern for the victims of flood but apparently misconceives the current national policy upon which the National Flood Insurance Program (N.F.I.P.) is based.

What you call for, namely that the Government not go on paying out money to help people "resettle exactly where they were... after each disaster" and otherwise more properly utilize the flood plains of the country, is really what the National Flood Insurance Program is all about.

Over six million structures in this country, worth an estimated $150 billion, now occupy the flood plains with a risk of flooding of at least 1 percent per year (or more than one chance in four during a 30-year mortgage life). No wonder we now spend, as a nation, more than $1 billion a year on flood-related disaster relief, and the losses are mounting. People have been lulled into a false sense of security as respects building in flood plains partly because the Federal Government has spent almost $10 billion since 1936 on dams and other structural works which, as you properly point out, often merely move the flood peril to another place. One could question whether many structural works have not only wasted taxpayer dollars but multiplied individual agony.

The N.F.I.P. is a different approach. It is based upon a dual principle—to make flood insurance available to ex-

The City and Its A Possible Option

To the Editor:
Your May 7 editorial "Bankruptcy Option" is a concept that remains bankrupt as a New York City option under the State amount for debt service debt" raised by real estate not be raised except to service on "funded debt."

In the first place, there is no "funded debt" concept as "funded debt" is defined in the Constitution. There is no provision in Section 10 of the Constitution, as well as of the General Municipal Law, which limits New York City's ability to raise taxes to an amount more than 2½ percent of the valuation of taxable property in addition to providing for the principal and interest on the bonds of New York City. No distinction is made in the bonds of New York City between short-term notes, if you so to it, then allow to payment of principal interest on its short-term notes will be greatly reduced.

Sound flood plain management is the key to the program's mission. We estimate that by the year 2000 damage from flooding will be $2 billion less in this country, because of the program's flood plain management measures, than it would have been without such measures. Of far greater importance, loss of life and individual suffering will be greatly reduced.

These are the sorts of approaches that you call for in your editorial. These are approaches that are the essence of the National Flood Insurance Program. J. ROBERT HUNTER Acting Federal Insurance Administrator Washington, April 28, 1976 findings of less exalted bodies be given the same privilege? The influence on the judge's decision would have similar value to a "recommendation of mercy." Support for Reagan

To the Editor:
Ronald Reagan's foreign policy views have struck a responsive chord in many Americans. There appears to be a growing understanding of the political reality that the United States and its Western allies are in retreat and decline and that, unless this trend can be halted, the ultimate result will most assuredly be the tragic loss of human freedom wherever it exists.

The United States' military power has clearly declined vis-à-vis our chief adversary, the Soviet Union, but as important is the paralysis of will that grips the West and its leadership in confronting the Communist challenge throughout the world.

Those who proclaim that the U. S. must compromise or retreat every time it is challenged, rather than risk a confrontation by standing firm, are unintentionally responsible for our weakened world position.

The harsh fact is, to preserve our freedom we must be willing to stand fast against all aggression and encroachment and accept the risks as other Americans have done in the course of our history. JAMES KELLY Kings Park, L. I., May 12, 1976

Toward Juror Dissents

To the Editor:
There seems to be a movement afoot aimed at the betterment of our administration of our legal system. One thing that is never questioned is fundamental, and that is the 100 percent agreement of the jury.

If twelve men in a box agree, it is assumed that they cannot be wrong, but again and again this has been proven untrue. As time goes on in America, people get less and less individual in their thinking, and in the jury room the pressures to unite in a decision are extreme. One who stands out against the thinking of eleven others is denounced as being not only insulting but antisocial. The wasted expense of money and time is flung in his face, the slur on his fellows by the words "the jury can't agree" is bitterly resented.

The Supreme Court permits its members to announce a verdict of disparate opinions. Why should not the

Of Banks, Laws and Equality

To the Editor:
In the pending legislation to grant additional powers to mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions, the state's commercial banks are being placed in an unfavorable competitive position.

Is it fair competition if savings banks are permitted to pay a 5½ percent dividend on their savings accounts and the commercial banks are restricted to 5 percent?

Commercial banks are now required to maintain sterile reserves, that is, funds placed in Federal Reserve branches earning no interest. Mutual banks, however, are permitted to invest their reserve fund requirements in government and other securities which create earnings for them. Shouldn't the reserve requirements be the same for both mutual and commercial banks if they compete in the same money market?

Some of the mutual savings banks reserves could be placed in municipal bonds. The commercial banks provide necessary dollars in the form of notes and bonds to school districts, villages, towns and states. At this date, the mutual savings banks' holdings of notes and municipal bonds is almost nil.

What would happen if the commercial banks were restricted in purchasing these notes and bonds by lack of deposit dollars. Erosion of deposits in commercial banks is a logical and realistic consequence if the mutual banks and others will be permitted to pay higher rates of interest on their savings accounts than commercial financial institutions. Because the mutual savings banks enjoy this ½ percent differential in interest on savings accounts they are attracting almost 60 percent of the new money. This percentage would increase if they are granted additional powers as proposed under the Superintendent's bill without the equalization of the interest on savings accounts in all financial institutions.

If one type of bank desires to perform a function of another in this financial group it should be required to change its structure to conform to the new objectives and services it will render. Thus, if a mutual bank wants to perform the services rendered by a commercial bank, let it convert to a commercial bank.

I favor equal treatment for all under equal conditions and equal requirements. Grant mutual banks all the powers of the commercial banks. This could create good competition and possibly better service to the community. But, make sure this is done on an equal basis without giving one the advantage over the other. [Editorial May 15]

Pollution Curb

To the Editor:
In the numerous editorial and opinion columns and articles on pollution and its effects I have yet to see any possibility of a large something like that every industrial plant stream of its water!

Contrary to what a city were to seek in a recently amended pollution and its effects would be reduced to the minimum not paid. What is that an equitable basis would be brought about (which could only bankruptcy), all other agreements would be necessary, discredited MALCOLM Scarsdale, N. Y.

While this is not such a legal issue, it is least equitable, and it is not to be confused with the principal of city bonds due while making the term notes subject to that makes them live for three years at a low interest rate of 8.

Your April 28 editorial "Trust" against accip United States of permit ability for the Northern present U.S. Trust Pacific Islands) is paid tragically shortsighted. 'The Retreat of the Liberal Sages'

By Orde Coombs

Last fall, with several members of the Yale Class of 1965, I returned to the chill of New Haven to mark, perfunctorily, the tenth year of our graduation. We had come of age during the civil rights movement of the mid-1960's, but before the days of rage and drugs. We had been nurtured, politically, in the bosom of Democratic liberalism, and we took the rhetoric of our liberal mentors seriously.

Those of us who were black were especially excited by America's liberal Establishment, and as the sun set and rose we pored over their books and periodicals and found in their words the strength to try to build an equitable America. We thought, then, that in our lifetime, and in this country, men would no longer have to forage in garbage cans.

Ten years later, on a foggy weekend, we walked with the wreckage of our hopes around us. We knew that something dreadful was happening in this land and that there was out much we could do about it. For the retreat of the liberal sages was everywhere. In their newspapers, in their journals, in their speeches and their research papers, they were busily trying to renounce forty years of liberalism and usher in the past.

Well, what is one to make of this? What has happened to the men who, over a decade ago, summoned this nation with imagination and verve to wage war on poverty, to safeguard the civil rights of minorities, to promote equality, to build a free civilization unlike any other in which strong men willingly ferret out the injustices heaped upon the weak, and to tell the meek that they, too, should raise their voices in celebration of themselves?

What has become of those middle-aged men who asked younger men to join the Peace Corps and take their skills across the world to help feed and organize those whose spirit had been corroded by poverty and colonialism?

Why does one find, now, flowing from their pens of gall, attacks on what they call "infantile liberalism" (Irving Kristol), or on the rise of "an Imperial Judiciary" (Nathan Glazer). And how did they get to this place where riding at their leaderless head is Daniel Patrick Moynihan, who in his desire to have black people behave like his ancestors—faithful to the land and the Virgin Mary—put "benign neglect" into our national lexicon, and guaranteed his place in American history?

The root of their retreat from magnanimity lies, I think, in the position in which these men—the others are Daniel Bell, Samuel P. Huntington, Seymour Martin Lipset, Robert Nisbet, Norman Podhoretz—found themselves as the Vietnam War was ending. The young had abandoned politics, the minorities now rudely insisted on speaking for themselves and the true conservatives ignored them. It was a kind of purgatory that has silenced less resilient men.

They could either pull up the draw-bridges around their universities or they could find a way to forge a new base of power. The former option was unthinkable for they have always imagined themselves at the resonant center of America's intellectual attainment and so deserving of their country's highest approbation. Soon, however, they found the pulley to power. And not for the last time, and certainly not the last group, they used, cynically, "the Negro question."

Black people had been arguing for some years that the paper granting of equality was without meaning unless special steps were taken to overcome the legacy of slavery and discrimination. They spoke, therefore, in vague terms about quotas, about reparations. And they spoke with raised voices, as a people without power must. The outcry was immediate and deafening, for America's equivocation toward blacks is unending since its people have never decided that the cost of having a permanent, hostile minority in its midst is too much to bear.

The neo-conservatives had found their cause. They hurried to pull out their quills to denounce quotas as un-American, to "prove" that busing did not help black children, to argue that extra money spent on educating the children of the poor was no guarantee of their future success.

When the courts became the only governmental arm to consistently take on the segregationists, the neo-conservatives announced that the courts were stepping beyond their parameters of influence, and in the name of liberty they would have to oppose the decisions of the courts.

These men have become so emboldened by their rhetoric that some have begun to call for "desirable limits to the extensions of political democracy" (Huntington). Others are openly railing against the specter of equal opportunity, which they have come to view as an upstart attempt by black people to move toward "equality of condition, equality of result."

Still others would have us, in this democracy, crown again the sensibility of elitism, and abandon that Sisyphean effort to make lowly men feel that they are worthy of their society.

There is not much one can do to stop this virus of disaffection, but as with all movements based on pragmatism, this, too, will wither and disappear. For the practitioners of the new "toughness" have already won all they can ever hope to win. They are widely read in conservative circles precisely because they seem to be saying that their early, vaunted liberalism was limp-wristed, soft, unworthy of their intellects.

But they will never be trusted by their own audience. And as they droop into occultancy about the dangers of the "New Equality," they will find that the noble tradition that they readily bartered away for power and pottage was worth more than a grudging invitation to William F. Buckley's pied-a-terre.

Orde Coombs is co-host with Lindsay Patterson of "Black Conversations" on WPIX-TV.

Reading Ford's Mind

By William Safire

Could these be my own "Flood Days"? Gee, the ups and downs in this business. Six months ago was a bum, a klutz, didn't stand a chance against Reagan; three months ago, I was riding high, had the nomination in the bag and the election looked like a breeze. Now here I am getting my bones rattled on a whistle-stop train tour of Michigan, which could be the end of the line.

Where did it all go wrong? Rog and Roo and Jack all say it was Henry's fault, that I should have dumped him when the dumping was good. Well, maybe so, but oo some things I get stubborn and I'm not sorry. Maybe Henry shouldn't be making those speeches in California—gotta call Leon Parma to San Diego and see what he thinks about that.

I think it's because I don't project well. Even when I get a good speech to give, which doesn't happen often, I can feel the audience slipping away. What did Mark Russell say about Jackson—that if he gave a fireside chat, the fire would go out? I've got a lot in common with Scoop.

No sense mooning, let's make some plans. If I win big in Michigan, I can turn this thing around again. If it's a squeaker, I'm still in deep trouble, and so is Bob Griffin's chance for the minority leadership. If I lose—that's the ball game. If a President can't carry his own state primary, he's through. Then what?

Then I have a couple of surprises to choose from. I could challenge Reagan to a series of debates in the next couple of weeks. Three loog ones—oo hour and a half each—one oo foreign policy, one on domestic policy, ooe on the economy.

Sure it would look like I'm desperate, but if I lose in Michigan, I might as well admit I'm desperate, and I know he's better on television than I am, but that's doing his prepared stuff, and I bet I could clobber him on the long debates with all kinds of details that I know better than anybody. As a matter of fact, Reagan's reputation for being a TV professional would work against him—everybody would expect him to be great and me awful. He wouldn't be so great and I wouldn't be so awful.

But why should he do it if he's ahead and have everything to lose, and I'm way behind and have nothing to lose? Because he can't turn down a debate challenge from the President of the United States. It would be unheard-of.

For a President to issue a debate challenge would be unheard-of, too, but that's good. Be dramatic. People would love it, the media would flip their lids. Shows that a President can still take the initiative. If he should duck it—which he wouldn't dare—I'll go all over California with an empty chair in my hand and I'd beat him in his home state on the fraidy-cat issue, which would even up any Michigan loss.

I like it. Sort of thing Truman would have done. The alternative, if I lose in Michigan, or win by an eyelash, is to pull a Johnson. Go on television and quit in dignity.

I've never been a quitter, and I stuck it out last year when everybody said I was a goner—but a President of the United States should never let himself be humiliated. And for a sitting President, in good times, to get beaten on the first ballot of the convention would be demeaning. Bad for the office.

So I would go on the tube and say, "My fellow citizens, I think I could win this election, because my policies

ESSAY have brought about peace and prosperity, but it seems that members of my own party don't agree. So be it. I'm stepping aside, and maybe somebody else wants to fight it out with Mr. Reagan." (Boy, would Rocky and Connally fall into each other's arms in a hurry—their people have been in cahoots about that for the last couple of weeks.)

Then I'd say, "There's something more important than being a President, and that is being a patriot. I want to conclude a very important arms agreement with the Soviet Union, before the moment of possibility slips away. To do that for my country, I'll renounce all hopes of election. And Henry Kissinger, another great patriot, will step aside also, to remove some of the obstacles to his home."

So I am going to Moscow in two months' time, accompanied by my oev Secretary of State—Elliott, or Rummy, or Bill, or Mel—to negotiate an end to the arms race. I invite candidates of both parties to send observers along and I'd even hold still for Jim Schlesinger. I also invite my fellow conservatives, now that the competitive pressure is off, to drop the "one-way street" stuff and help me lock up a suitable agreement."

Even I could put over a speech like that. If Reagan sniped at me, his nomination would be worth nothing. But if he met me half way, we could help each other win—he could win an election, and I could win a place in history.

Well, let's see how I do in Michigan. Win or lose, I'm still in office as President of the United States, and it's the kind of place where you have the power to surprise the hell out of everybody.

The Talon zipper story: how private enterprise works to make a good idea better.

It all started in 1893, when Whitcomb Judson invented what he called a clasp locker.

Lewis Walker liked the idea and started a company to make it. But it took twenty years of struggle before the company had its first real success—the Hookless Fastener.

Today it's called a Talon zipper—and it started a whole new industry that provides tens of thousands of jobs around the world.

Competition and growth Last year the Talon Division of Textron sold over a billion zippers. But we don't have the business all to ourselves. Since 1913 more than a hundred companies have come into the business to compete with us.

Competition. That's why we make zippers in hundreds of styles and colors. That's why we pioneered the nylon zipper.

That's why we're working on even better fasteners to help us stay ahead. That's what private enterprise is all about.

Spreading the word It's a story that people can understand and maybe even get excited about. So Textron has made it into a television commercial. You can see it on the election coverage programs of the NBC and ABC networks. Together with other commercials like it dealing with other stories from Textron—about Bell helicopters, Homelite chain saws, Fafnir bearings. And there'll be more. We think stories like these are worth telling. You'll find several of them in our booklet "How Private Enterprise Works at Textron." Write for a copy to: Textron, Providence, Rhode Island 02903.

Examining New York's Crisis

By Stanley Turkel

From union leader to politician, from elected officials to appointed commissioners, from teachers to firemen to policemen to City University of New York students we hear the same refrain:

"Our department [school, work, institution] is essential to the city's well-being. Therefore, don't reduce our budget, cut someone else's. Furthermore, the reductions already imposed are horrendous, causing elimination of vital services, making the city a wasteland, converting the schools into custodial institutions, forcing the middle class to flee to the suburbs and corporations to relocate."

We have listened to this theme repeated with variations by Mayor Beame; by Albert Shanker, head of the United Federation of Teachers; by Victor Gotbaum, head of District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; by Paul Gibson Jr., Deputy Mayor; by Kenneth McFeely, who until he resigned last week was president of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association; by Matthew Guinan, president of the Transport Workers Union; and by others. But there comes a revelation: The New York Times editorial of Friday, April 2, 1976, on the transit settlement says: "... the subway system operates with 10 percent more workers now than it had a decade ago. And it carries 400 million fewer riders."

More workers with fewer riders? Then why the complaint about layoffs and staff reductions? Shouldn't the staff be reduced when the work load shrinks? The trouble is that the assumption is made that the staffing levels of 1974 are the correct ones and that any reduction is suitable cause for public demonstrations and/or shrieks of outrage.

To discover if the same condition applies in other major city departments, let's compare the numbers of full-time workers for the fiscal years 1964-1965, 1974-1975 and the so-called austerity budget of Sept. 30, 1975.

Police	29,207	42,162	31,266
Fire	12,991	14,192	12,218
Social Services	14,444	20,993	12,293
Board of Education	14,178	27,819	22,773
Health and Welfare	8,267	28,289	14,379
Health and Welfare's Corporation	23,267	46,778	41,753
All others	33,197	61,648	30,122
	229,247	298,735	263,211

What this chart shows is that even after the recent layoffs by firing and attrition, most of the largest city departments still have more employees than they had in 1964! So, while no one wants another person to lose a job, there are more people working on the city payroll now than in 1964. And the city's population has remained static in the same period (1960—7,781,984; 1970—7,867,760).

Some crisis! Some reaction to the crisis! We are being treated to a spectacle of institutional greed and selfishness. The union leaders want only to preserve their constituencies. The politicians want only to preserve their party structure. The people are left without representation and without sufficient information to decide who is telling the truth.

Is it too much to ask our political leaders to make selective cuts where necessary to reduce the budget to manageable size in order to preserve our wonderful city? Is it too much to expect union leaders to agree to eliminate unnecessary work, to urge their employees to perform more productively? Is it too much to ask for just a little bit of intellectual honesty and statesmanlike conduct?

Stanley Turkel was president of the City Club of New York.

PLAYBOY LICENSE OR FRANCHISE, ANYONE?

At a recent convention in Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, 70 Playboy licensee and franchisee representatives from all over the world met to establish communications and develop new ideas.

In Malaysia and Costa Rica, franchised operations are developing new resort hotels. And in Tokyo, a new Club will open later this year.

Other franchising opportunities with highly-qualified, experienced operators, are under consideration in the U.S. and around the world.

Playboy is increasingly active in granting licenses for products to carry the Playboy logo—from sunglasses to jigsaw puzzles.

To find out more about Playboy licensing or franchising (other than to Illinois residents), drop a note to Gil Simon, Director, New Business Group, 919 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

THEY'RE PLAYING PLAYBOY RECORDS.

Like I've Got A Feeling (We'll Be Seeing Each Other Again)—Al Wilson's first Playboy release. And it's aiming for the top of the r&b and pop charts. Also watch for Al Wilson, his new album to be released very soon. They're also playing Everyday Without You from Hamilton, Joe Frank & Reynolds' hit album, Fallin' in Love. It, too, is climbing the charts. And Mickey Gilley's album, Gilley's Greatest Hits—Vol. 1, is heading to the top of the country charts.

Also look for albums from Beserkley Record artists Greg Kihn, Earth Quake and Jonathan Richman, distributed by Playboy Records.

WHAT A JUNE ISSUE!

"Yes, I wish I had killed him" declares Sara Jane Moore, the middle-aged radical who tried to assassinate President Ford. In her startling Playboy Interview, Moore also says she was an FBI informant right up to the time she fired the gun.

To explain America's love affair with the automobile, PLAYBOY flagged down three speed demons, who in turn give us a detailed view of the vehicular mayhem at Indy, interview a six-time loser of the event who refuses to give up and present a case against the national speed limit in 55 Be Damned!

If you're not already convinced that Sex Is Good for Your Health, you'll find that this well-documented article presents evidence aplenty that most people's favorite indoor sport is a great regimen for staying young and active.

Naturally, there's more fabulous writing, illustration, photography and cartoons—all competing for attention with the long-awaited revelation of the 1976 Playmate of the Year, who is celebrated in a most stunning pictorial!

You'll find it all in the current PLAYBOY along with a 23-percent increase in advertising pages over the same issue a year ago.

NOW KEYHOLDERS GET PREFERRED TREATMENT

Playboy Preferred, a new dinner society for Playboy Club keyholders, is winning plaudits from keyholders and restaurateurs alike. And it's no wonder. With Playboy Preferred, fine restaurants within an area provide one courtesy dinner when a keyholder orders dinner for two or more. And restaurants are pleased with this method of introducing themselves to new clientele.

The cost to the keyholder? Nothing. It's just one of the many benefits available under our Playboy Keyholders' Special program.

Playboy Preferred is now available in Cincinnati and comes to New York as of June 1. Chicago and L.A. are next in line.

Roosevelt Island Tramway Ready for Maiden Voyage

A cable car crossing Second Avenue on test run

By WARREN HOGE The Roosevelt Island tramway will carry its first paying passengers tomorrow, and they will make the crossing to the new community in the East River in just three-and-a-half minutes. It took the tramway itself an awful lot longer to make its first trip. While repeated delays during the last year kept the cable cars grounded, all manner of speculation filled the air. It was said that the cars were being secretly piloted under cover of night, that they had collided once in a trial crossing, that they were being eyed skeptically by insurers. None of these reports was true. Sharon Keilen, head of the Roosevelt Island Residents' Association, recalled the most persistent report: "The tramway will be open this week." This week that report finally comes true. The $6.8 million system is being formally inaugurated today by Mayor Beame, some 400 guests of the Urban Development Corporation and island residents. It opens to the public at 6 A.M. tomorrow. Robert Dormer, operations vice president for U.D.C., said he had lost track of how many starting dates there had been. "I haven't kept an inventory," Mr. Dormer said, "but it seems like it's been every week for the past six months." The system was supposed to have gone into operation last September and at count-

Rockwell's World of Scouting Still Exists

By GEORGE VECSEY The Cub Scouts and Boy Scouts stood in front of the Norman Rockwell paintings — modern boys with their hair sweeping down to their Scout neckerchiefs; boys who do ecology projects, boys who can't possibly remember how Norman Rockwell creations were on the cover of the Saturday Evening Post 318 times, shaping the self-image of a nation. As the boys viewed Mr. Rockwell's scouting paintings, they gazed and whispered with the pleasure of self-recognition. Yes, they agreed, not only was the man a fine artist—who made everything so realistic—but he also painted the scouting movement they know today. "I love the painting of the boy coming home from Scout camp," said 10-year-old Alex Rosenzweig of North Brunswick, N.J. "The look of pride on his parents' faces because their son is succeeding at scouting. That's the way people feel in Scouts." This critique from modern-day Scouts came as 31 of Mr. Rockwell's most famous Boy Scout calendar paintings were being assembled for a public show that begins today, sponsored by J.C. Penney, at the Penney Building at 1301 Avenue of the Americas.

The paintings will be on view through May 28 from 9 A.M. to 4:45 P.M., Monday through Friday. The show will coincide with the annual meeting of the Boy Scouts of America which begins today at the New York Hilton Hotel. The leaders of the Boy Scouts like to say how much scouting has changed with the times — how they set up troops in the inner cities; how they redesigned their merit badges to prepare boys for careers and hobbies in a complex world; how they opened up Explorer scouting into a co-ed activity. All this is undeniably true. But for visitors to the Boy Scout Museum in New Brunswick, N.J., last week, the important thing is that Mr. Rockwell's world still exists. "My sister looked like that when she cried on my uniform—she's only six," said 8-year-old Mark Saloman of Pack 158 in North Brunswick as he pointed to the painting "Can't Wait," done in 1972 of a chubby Cub Scout discarding his blue uniform for his big brother's out-sized brown Boy Scout uniform. Other boys liked the 1949 painting, "Friend in Need," which showed a Boy Scout taping an injured paw of a dog held by a somber Cub Scout. Others, like Alex Rosenzweig, liked the 1961 painting, "Himmecoming," showing a mother, a younger brother, a grandmother, twin dogs and a rat all racing downstairs as the father greets the son returning from Scout camp. Still others liked the 1973 offering, "From Concord to Tranquility," featuring Neil Armstrong, the astronaut. And others like the earlier dark-hued Rockwells with their wisps of memories of frontier scouting, the real thing. Men Relate to Painting "Yes, but the adults all come past my office and tell me how much they like 'The Scoutmaster' [1956]," said Ilmar Plier, manager of the Scout Museum. "Any scoutmaster has stood watch over a campfire late at night while the boys were sleeping, thinking of all his responsibilities. The men really relate to that one." Even Mr. Rockwell noted in his autobiography in 1959, "Norman Rockwell," that some people thought his Scout paintings were corny. He described how his close friend and fellow artist, Jack Allerton, called one Scout painting

"propaganda," "sentimental trash." "Well, I like to do it," Mr. Rockwell told his friend. And he described the next painting: "I'm even looking at a cloudy vision of George Washington kneeling and praying in the snow at Valley Forge. And the friend 'grunted horribly and grabbed at his back, twisting about in his chair as if he'd been stabbed.'" Mr. Rockwell noted that he was never very good at conveying either sensuality or tragedy. He felt more comfortable with the sentiments of ordinary people. Scouting was a perfect vehicle for him—beginning when he was 17 and hired in to do a hundred illustrations for Boy's Life, the Scout publication. His Sons Were Scouts Later he did the annual Scout calendar for Brown and Bigelow, beginning in 1923 and missing only 1928 and 1930 (at least six paintings have totally disappeared). Mr. Rockwell attended many Scout activities and his own three sons helmed in the Scouts and were often ointed into the calendars. Mr. Rockwell even put himself into the 1959 calendar, showing a group of Scouts peering over his shoulder as he painted in a field. Now 82 years old, Mr. Rockwell is still working on his 1976 Scout calendar, which officials say will be the last in the series. He lives in Stockbridge, Mass., where many of his other works have been accumulated in a museum. In the New York area, the paintings can touch a modern viewer, Sam Geller is a 17-year-old Scout from Troop 80 in Kendall Park, N. J., whose red hair and ruddy features seem right from a Rockwell painting. The boy wrestles for his high school team, has a paper route, is an honor student and belongs to a youth group. "But scouting is one of my top priorities," he said the other day. "You develop pride because you learn how to do things. They teach you leadership and character. I have seen younger Scouts mature in a few years. Sure, sometimes in school people put down scouting because of the uniforms and the discipline. But our friends understand." "The merit badges are designed for today's world," said Mike Orlikoff of Troop 88 in Kendall Park. "They got badges in an electric environment. We went around petitions to get a state park built, then we built a bridge in that park all by ourselves." These boys see no conflict with the safe world in the Rockwell paintings—and they say they see themselves. Mr. Rockwell would be pleased.

Boy Scout Museum in New Brunswick, N.J., last group of scouts inspected some of the Norman Rockwell paintings that will be in the show that opens in New York today. Among the paintings is, at lower center, "Beyond the Easel," a self-portrait of Mr. Rockwell discussing one of his works with a group of scouts.

MONDAY, MAY 17, 1976

The Major Events of the Day

International: Nablus, an Israeli-occupied city on the West Bank, yesterday proclaimed two days of mourning and a general strike in protest over the killing of an Arab girl by an Israeli soldier. Beirut and its suburbs went through one of the most violent days of the Lebanese civil war. Scores of people, most of them civilians, died in exchanges of heavy artillery and mortars. The collapse of the two-day-old truce, which had been honored at best only partly, came as Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, conferred in Damascus with President Hafez el-Assad of Syria against a background of Syrian-Palestinian tension. [1:3-4.] Metropolitan: In a tough report to the Senate on New York City's fiscal-crisis loan program, the Senate Banking Committee proposed that the Government "seriously consider" ending its $2.3 billion in annual aid if the city failed to maintain its three-year municipal wage freeze, and proposed that city employees' fringe benefits be reduced as a condition for continuing the aid. The committee urged the city and state to confront the rent control "problem" squarely and, "if necessary," to take the actions needed to phase out rent control. Rent control, the committee said, was "a major cause of the decline of New York City's housing stock and the erosion of its real-estate tax base." [1:3.] Government and Politics: The New York City Buildings Department disregarded instructions from the Mayor's office, city officials said, and issued a permit allowing the owners of Broadway's de Mille Theater to convert it into three movie theaters that, according to officials, will show pornographic films. The permit was approved within 24 hours after a written request for it was submitted last March 22. Preparatory work on the conversion has begun. Sidney Baumgarten, special assistant to the Mayor in charge of cleaning up midtown, is attempting to revoke the permit. "That permit should never have been issued," he said. [1:7.] The start of the $5 million acoustic renovation of Avery Fisher Hall in Lincoln Center began with the dismantling of the interior almost immediately after the New York Philharmonic finished its concert Saturday night. This kind of renovation in a modern concert hall is without precedent. The hall has had a poor acoustical record since its opening 14 years ago. [1:4-6.] The apartment house service employees' union, whose strike is entering its third week, and the Realty Advisory Board, representing the building owners, are scheduled to meet today with Vincent D. McDonnell, chairman of the State Mediation Board. Mr. McDonnell said he had called the meeting at the request of Mayor Beame. Negotiations between the union and the landlords have been at an impasse since the landlords rejected a wage-increase proposal by a mayor-at-panel last week. The advisory board's vice president said today's meeting was being held to "assess the situation." [5:1-3.]

Livingston Merchant, 72, A Top Diplomat, Is Dead

By ROBERT E. TOMASSON

Livingston T. Merchant, former Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, twice Ambassador to Canada and a key aide to President Eisenhower during the Geneva summit meeting in 1955, died Saturday at his home in Washington after having suffered a heart attack.

Mr. Merchant was once described by the late Secretary of State John Foster Dulles as "the ideal of a Foreign Service officer," an estimation known to have been shared by President Eisenhower.

After a successful career as a leading investment counselor, Mr. Merchant joined the Government in 1942 at the age of 39 and steadily moved up in the Department of State at the height of the cold war.

During much of the 1950's, Mr. Merchant probably handled more special, top-level diplomatic assignments than anyone in the Department of State except for his immediate superior, Robert D. Murphy, whom he replaced as Under Secretary in December 1959.

Mr. Merchant was once described by the late Secretary of State John Foster Dulles as "the ideal of a Foreign Service officer," an estimation known to have been shared by President Eisenhower.

First Four-Year Class Graduates at Purchase

PURCHASE, N.Y., May 16—Members of the first four-year class at the State University of New York at Purchase, who have demonstrated the spirit of early pioneers, gathered for commencement exercises at noon yesterday under a huge green tent.

More than half the 170 graduating seniors had been members of the first freshman class, comprising 300 students, that entered the college in September 1972.

A Touch of Nostalgia

With a touch of nostalgia, yesterday's graduation exercises were held under a tent, which was a reminder of the first class in the new dormitory building, an increase in faculty-student ratio, and a shortage of supplies, Dr. Kaplan said. But, he added, "compared to other institutions we do very well indeed."

Mr. Pribichevich was believed to have been the only representative of the American press behind the German lines in Yugoslavia in 1944. In early May of that year he was flown into Yugoslavia, landed 10 miles behind the fighting front and was taken immediately to Marshal Tito's mountain stronghold.

He was the first American newspaperman to meet Tito face-to-face (they talked in Serbo-Croatian) and the first correspondent to talk directly with the partisans in their own language.

Beame Is Expected to Testify With 100 Against State Formula on School Aid

By ROY R. SILVER
Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L. I., May 16—Mayor Beame and other top New York City officials are expected to be among the 100 witnesses who will testify, starting this week, in a suit that challenges the constitutionality of the state's financing of education.

Among the plaintiffs are the state's four largest cities—New York, Rochester, Syracuse and Buffalo. They contend they have less money to spend for education because of municipal "overburdens," such as fire and police protection, sanitation and other services, and thus should receive a larger share of state aid.

The long list of witnesses for the case brought by 16 suburban and urban school districts, include educators, teachers of special programs, the Mayor of Syracuse and school superintendents from cities from various parts of the country.

erty value, the more it spends for each pupil, the poorer the district, the less it spends. Dr. Berke, who was assisted by Dr. Joy H. Moskowitz in preparing the 80-page report on behalf of the plaintiffs, testified on behalf of the 16 suburban and rural school districts that have challenged the constitutionality of the present system of allocating funds for educational purposes through state aid based on the property tax.

"The disparities in spending levels that grow out of property value differentials have a regular, direct and discriminatory impact on the educational opportunities afforded to public school children in New York State," Dr. Berke contended.

State Held Negligent Dr. Berke said that the present subsidy system in the state was inequitable because school district taxpayers did not always get what they paid for and also because the state failed to pay and to return educational funds in accordance with need.

spent, it would make us proud of the system." In noting the variation among the state's 704 school districts in property wealth per pupil, Dr. Berke said that it ranged from a high of $412,370 on Fishers Island to a low of $8,834 in Salmon River, Lawrence County. This, he said, was a range of 46 to 1.

Since the tax on property is the basic source for locally raised revenue in New York and "since the state-aid formula fails to equalize this disparity in property wealth, that range between the wealthiest and poorest districts results in a substantial variation in the district's ability to provide educational opportunities for their schoolchildren," Dr. Berke added.

He said the current state-aid system "is notably ineffective in making up the differences in district wealth" and added that under the present system, which provides greater state aid for the poorer districts, "the final result is that local wealth continues to determine the amounts spent on education."

Hospitals Corporation Held Losing Millions

New York City's Health and Hospitals Corporation loses about $200 million a year in emergency and outpatient care to people who do not pay, according to a corporation spokesman and an audit by Arthur Levitt, the State Comptroller.

The audit also found that Harlem Hospital and the corporation had done poorly in billing and collecting co-insurance payments from patients who had private insurers and deductible amounts not covered.

12 Cult Members Seized in Kidnapping

The police arrested 12 members of a religious cult known as the Rastafarians and charged them with kidnapping a 16-year-old woman and her year-old son. The mother and child were not harmed. According to the police, the woman and child were kidnapped last Monday from an apartment in the Bronx and shuttled for six days between two cult hideouts in Brooklyn. The woman, when allowed to go to a grocery store last Saturday night, went to a police station instead. The two victims were not identified.

Girl, 6, Falls to Death

A 6-year-old Brooklyn girl fell to her death from the fourth floor of the Holy Cross Polish National Catholic Church in the East Village, at 57 St. Marks Place. The girl, Benita Kowalski, of 921 Brighton First Road in the Brighton Beach section was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where she died about an hour later, at 4:10 A. M. During a wedding reception, her mother, Stefania, had left her for a nap, in a room where the widow was partly open, the police said.

From the Police Blotter:

The Burger King restaurant at 47 East 59th Street was robbed of $700 by two masked robbers wearing gloves who slashed James Dermitt, 26 years old, the assistant manager, on both hands, severing the tendons of two left fingers, beat him with their fists, then handcuffed and locked him in a basement storeroom. He was admitted to Lenox Hill Hospital. . . . A 54-year-old woman was shot to death, allegedly, by a 44-year-old Bronx woman who was admitted to 95th Street Avenue in the Morrisania section. The victim was identified as Willie Mae Decay. The robber, Harris Henderson, 62, who was arrested for homicide, also reportedly fired a wild shot at Thomas Feud, 51, of 2013 Fifth Avenue and then hit him on the head with a baseball bat when he attempted to subdue him.

Yorkie Again Judged Best In Dog Show

By WALTER R. FLETCHER Special to The New York Times BROOKVILLE, L.L., May 16 — A Yorkshire terrier, his silken tresses flowing to the wet turf, moved sturdily through the rain today to catch the eye of a best-in-show judge for the second day in a row. He was Ch. Mayfair Loup de Mer, owned by Ann Seranne and Barbara Wolfertman of Newton, N.J., and the occasion was the 74th show of the Long Island Kennel Club on the spacious grounds of the New York Institute of Technology.

"The Yorkie's a little beauty," said Mrs. Boh Adamsoo, who was judging her first final. "The bad weather made no difference. He's a courageous little dog and more than held his own. I've seen him many times but never judged him."

Yesterday, Loopy led a field of 1562 at Hofstra in Hempstead, and today he was best of 1527. On the way to the final, the 5 1/2-pounder, who will be 5 years old in September, was best Yorkie for the 121st time and took his 45th group. He now has eight top awards, as well as a national specialty. Loopy is handled by Wendell Sammet.

Knocking at the best-in-show door 14 times has been Lieut. Col. William B. Garvey's and Sherman Katz's Old English sheepdog, Ch. Barrelroll Blues in the Night. "One of these days, we hope to get the big award," said Mrs. Garvey, whose husband, a former test pilot, did the handling.

Even a Prince Fails To Stop Bumblebee

Special to The New York Times STAMFORD, Conn., May 16 — Ever since Cleopatra sailed her barge down the Nile, yachting has attracted royalty. Today Prince Henrik of Denmark served on the crew aboard Jesse Phillips's Charisma in the Stamford-Denmark Friendship Race on hazy Long Island Sound.

With the Prince at the helm, the 53-foot sailing vessel smashed over the finish line first, some 60 seconds ahead of Bumblebee, a 50-foot Royal Danish minisweeper.

While four large boat divisions raced the longer course, nine other divisions competed on an 8.2 nautical-mile course from mid-Sound to Ling Neck Point off Darieo and back to the breakwater.

Phillips, a Dayton, Ohio, industrialist who had won two Long Island Sound races the week before and his crew were aboard Charisma although it had been chartered to Commodore Morgan Ames.

Some 245 yachts, 20 feet and larger, started under dark skies as a 20-knot northeast wind pushed waves to four and six feet. Not only the weather dampened the festivities. An hour after the award ceremonies, with Queen Margaret II and the Prince en route to New York, the Stamford Yacht Club received a bomb threat by telephone and 200 persons waited in the rain while it was checked out.

The Prince had arrived at the club for flag-raising ceremonies before the race, and then was ferried to mid-Sound, where Charisma, a Sparkman & Stephens design, was at the starting line. Looking at the fog rolling in as his car approached Stamford, the 41-year-old Prince, who races a Koar Class keel boat in the Baltic Sea, sighed. "It's not fair," he said, "to have traveled so far for a race only to find the same weather as we would oow have to Denmark."

But the Prince was no fair-weather sailor. Changing from his black blazer and light-blue slacks into his yachting clothes, red slacks and a blue turtle-neck shirt,

Harvard Varsity Crew Wins Eastern Sprint Title

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE Special to The New York Times PRINCETON, N.J., May 15 — "We just breezed right by them," said Bruce Larson, the coxswain of the Harvard varsity heavyweight crew today in describing the key moment of the Eastern sprint regatta on Lake Carnegie. The Crimson boat passed Wisconsin at 1,200 meters of the 2,000-meter course (1.4 miles) and won its championship by a boat length from the Badgers.

Then came the crews of Penn, Princeton, Brown and Boston University. But the unbeaten Harvard crew, which had an easy time of it this season, got the challenge which had sought from the Wisconsin eight. "It was by far our hardest race," said Larson.

This was the third year in a row that the varsity boat coached by Harry Parker won the Eastern sprint title and the 10th time since 1964. Crimson crews today, in the first of two regatta events, won the varsity title among the heavyweight eights and the final for second varsities in the lightweight division.

Canadiens Defeat Flyers, 5-3, Sweep Series for Stanley Cup

Wayne Stephenson looks back into the net after goal scored by Canadiens' Steve Shutt in the first period in Philadelphia. Canadiens' Pete Mahovlich skates by the open net.

By ROBIN HERMAN
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, May 16—Hoisting hockey's glistering prize, the Stanley Cup, on their shoulders, the Montreal Canadiens returned the National Hockey League championship north of the border tonight.

The Flying Frenchmen defeated the defending champions, the Philadelphia Flyers, 5-3, and swept the final series, 4-0, before a frenzied, capacity crowd in the Spectrum. The Flyers had held the cup the last two years.

It had taken just 13 games for the Canadiens to complete three playoff rounds and forge the quickest Stanley Cup conquest since the league expanded. They had beaten the Flyers by a single goal in each of the first three games, but tonight the Canadiens' most high-powered line broke a 3-3 deadlock with 5:42 to go on a goal by Guy Lafleur. Then Peter Mahovlich scored for the two-goal victory.

"I think there's a lot of happy faces out there because we lost," said the Flyers' Larry Barber. "More than if we won. I don't think too many people were happy the last two years that we won it. Because of this violence thing, it was blown out of proportion."

But he added: "We lost to a hell of a team that's got the depth of no other team in the league, and I think that hurt us."

The level of hockey skill in tonight's game and in the entire series was remarkable, and this game never became violent. Philadelphia left that tactic behind in Toronto when several of its players were inflicted after a quarter-final game there.

But when the hard-working Flyers came close to Montreal's incredible pace, the Canadiens, coached by Scotty Bowman, simply sharpened their play to match them.

"You must remember," said Fred Shero, Philadelphia's coach, "Montreal's such a great club; if we would have played better, maybe they would have played even better."

Of his plans for next season, Shero said, "I imagine we have to make some decisions quickly about trades and strengthen the team."

Most of the goals tonight were scored without a full complement of players on the ice. Thoughtless penalties, such as Don Salski's interference while his team was already a man short, a tripping penalty against Guy Lapointe, and the hooking penalty called on Gary Dornhoefer were costly in both teams in this desperate, high-powered contest.

After Kate Smith, in a flouzy lime-colored dress, left the sellout crowd of 17,777 in a frenzied state by singing the Flyers' lucky "God Bless America," Reggie Leach electrified the fans further by scoring on the game's first shot and setting a season and playoff scoring record of 80 goals. The teams were even—skating four-on-four at the time but after Leach's goal came a succession of power-play scores. With Salski in the penalty box, Steve Shutt beat Wayne Stephenson in the Philadelphia goal and then, with Bill Barber off the ice, Pierre Bouchard shot through a crowd past the screened Philadelphia goalie. Tom Bladen helped tie the score before the first period was over, sending a shot from the point.

Celtics Win, 99-94; Cavs by 3-2

By SAM GOLDAPER
Special to The New York Times

MAY 16 — Red unofficially and returned to the Boston Celtics before a national television audience, drew a standing ovation from the crowd of 12,951. Tom Heinsohn, the Celtic coach, was ejected from the game with 1 minute 58 seconds left in the third period when he was slapped with his second technical foul (automatic expulsion from the game). He had complained when Cowens was charged with his fourth foul.

Heinsohn's other technical foul came midway in the first quarter when he disputed a foul call against Cowens and threw a towel into the stands.

When Heinsohn turned the game over to his assistant, John Killilea, the Celtics led, 61-60.

"Red just turned to me and said, 'I'll see you,'" said Irv Levin, the Celtic owner who had been sitting next to Auerbach. "It sure was high drama. It got the crowd high."

Warriors' Rick Barry, left, exchanging punches with Suns' Rick Sniders in deciding game of semifinal playoffs at Oakland. Both players remained in the game.

Suns Oust Warriors, 94-86, Gaining N.B.A. Playoff Final

By LEONARD KDPPEY
Special to The New York Times

OAKLAND, Calif., May 16—Another incipient sports "dynasty" came crashing down in less than a year today as the Golden State Warriors were eliminated from the National Basketball Association playoffs by the Phoenix Suns, who won the seventh and deciding game of their semifinal series, 94-86.

The Warriors who were the defending champions, had posted the best win-loss record during the regular season. They had beaten Detroit in their first playoff series, 4-2, while Phoenix was getting by Seattle, and they had taken a 3-2 lead over the Suns only last Wednesday.

But the Suns, who call themselves the "Sunderland team" since beating Seattle, fought back with a 1-point victory in Phoenix on Friday and with a crushing final quarter today. Behind by 10 points in the second period and by 6 at halftime, they moved ahead in the third and took control after a 70-70 tie with nine minutes to play. Over the next six minutes, they outscored Golden State, 18-6.

Barry Poops Out

The climb in the title round was well-earned, too. Coached by John MacLeod, who stresses team defense and five-man offense, the Suns started to click in midseason after Gar Heard arrived from Buffalo and their two rookies, Alvan Adams and Rick Sobers, came into their own. Combined with such veterans as Dick Van Arsdale, Paul Westphal, Keith Erickson and Curtis Perry, they brought the team to a final round for the first time in its eight-year history.

In the showdown, Heard, who was playing Rick Barry, and Westphal scored 21 points apiece. Adams got 20 rebounds and 18 points, while Sobers and Perry scored 12 apiece in a display of admirable balance. They also did more damage in rebounding, especially on offense, as they did Friday night.

For the Warriors, the final failure was a cringing affair of all the elements that made them the most successful team in the league for nearly two seasons.

First of all there was Barry, their acknowledged leader, who popped out in the second half, adding only 6 points in the 14 he scored in the first half.

Then there was the high-speed running game, which the Warriors never generated. They couldn't fast break too much because they didn't rebound that well, but they did get their share of steals and failed to convert on often. On set plays, during the second half, they did more and more standing around and dribbling the ball up the floor, instead of creating movement. That was a

Proud Delta Victor in Belmont Fog

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

Delta's showing began making some of the same horsemen think the powerful filly is on her way to "winning herself out" — earning the amount of her purchase price. Her victory, worth $53,810, increased her earnings to $152,181.

"She sure is a powerful lady," said Jorge Velasquez after scoring with the filly in the one-mile race by 4 1/4 lengths over Sheldon Raab's Snooze. "I had her on the lead all the way and she never let up in the speed."

"You know, I forgot it was Sunday. I also forgot this race was worth more than $50,000," said the Panamanian jockey with a big grin.

"She was pointed out that she was the first Sunday stakes event of the season. 'If I had realized it I probably would have ridden harder.'"

No one in the crowd of 23,797, a turnout surprisingly large in view of the light drizzle that continued through much of the afternoon, was able to judge just how "hard" Velasquez actually rode. The contest was run in a thick fog that crept in just before the feature and obscured the entire backstretch and the home turn.

But there was no doubt that in gaining her second stakes triumph and her fourth of the year, Proud Delta had provided her jockey with a speedy trip. Topweighted with 122 pounds, she was clocked in the last time of 1:35. As the third choice in the wagering, she returned $9.40 for $2 straight.

Ralph Kercheval's favored Fleet Victress, carrying 115 pounds, with Braulio Baeza up, finished seventh in the eight-horse race. Mrs. Arnold Willcox's Let Me Linger, the second choice, with Angel Cordero at the reins, was third, finishing a head back of Snooze. Cordero suffered the added indignity of being "dumped" while pulling his mount up after the race.

Mets Top Reds, 7-5, Lose, 8-1

By PARTON KEESÉ
Special to The New York Times

CINCINNATI, May 16 — The New York Mets beat the Cincinnati Reds, 7-5, in the first game of their doubleheader at Riverfront Stadium today but lost to the Reds' "B" squad, 8-1, in the second contest.

After Jon Matlack, the Mets' unbeaten left-hander, had picked up his fourth triumph of the year behind two-run homers by Ed Kranepool and Joe Torre for New York's only victory in the four-game series, the Reds won easily without Johnny Bench, Tony Perez, George Foster or Joe Morgan in their lineup.

Don Gullett, benefiting from a pair of three-run innings off Craig Swao, New York's starter, gained his third victory against two defeats by lasting just five innings. When rain interrupted the second game for two more innings and then left, complaining of a stiff neck, Pat Darcy hurled the final four innings, allowing only one hit.

New York's only run in the nightcap came from John Milner's fourth homer, which extended the left fielder's consecutive-game hitting streak to 18.

Yanks Bow to Orioles, 7-0

By MURRAY CHASS

Ken Holtzman and the Baltimore Orioles confirmed a role reversal yesterday at Yankee Stadium: Suddenly they're a hot team in the American League East, and the Yankees are a cool team.

Holtzman allowed only five hits and the rest of the Orioles amassed 13 of their own hits, including six doubles, as they defeated the Yankees, 7-0. The loss was the New Yorkers' fifth in their last seven games, including four of six on this home stand.

"I'm not concerned about it," Manager Billy Martin said about the skid. "At the rate we were going (a 15-5 win-loss record), the pennant would've been over by the All-Star break. You can't expect to win all the time. You're going to have your lulls. Now we're due to get hot again."

The Orioles, apparently, were due also. Earl Weaver's team has won five of its last six games and has batted .394 doing it, compared with a .200 team average previously.

Besides keeping two trends going, the Orioles' latest performance gave the Yankees a chance to use some of their little-used pitchers. However, their least-used pitcher didn't get to pitch.

Larry Gura, the only player who has been on a major league roster all season and hasn't played yet, was traded before the game to the Kansas City Royals for Fran Healy, who will serve as the Yankees' third-string catcher.

"I had a feeling something was going to happen," said Gura, who was the team's player representative. "My wife wanted to get some furniture for our apartment, but I told her to hold off. We've been sleeping on the floor since the season started."

Gura, a 29-year-old left-hander who won 12 games and lost one with the Yankees was happy at the chance to go to a team where he could pitch, but he said he wished the Yankees had made the trade at the beginning of the season so "they wouldn't have wasted my time."

Asked if he was bitter about the treatment he received last season, Gura said: "I'm not bitter about the treatment he received last season. I'm not bitter about the treatment he received last season."

Ever since the Derby, Honest Pleasure's stable had steadfastly refused to comment on a rumor that the colt had suffered colic in Louisville and had also had a stone bruise or minor abscess caused by gravel. Asked about it at the breakfast for horsemen and press on Friday, John Nazareth, Jolley's assistant, had said only that the barn was offering no excuses. Now Bert Firestone, the owner, used similar words.

He was standing in the doorway of the tack room watching the TV show take shape. "I feel very confident," he said. "I'm not making any excuses but I think you'll see a far different horse today than you saw in Kentucky."

"Forty seconds," came a voice over Wright's intercom, and just then there was a squawk from the barn area's public-address system. "Bring your horses to the paddock for the Preakness, please." Wright held his ground and ran through three tactful interviews.

"I hope your horse runs well," a man said to Campo as the tableau broke up.

"So do I," John said.

Alberto Barrera followed Jolley under the shedrow and offered a hand. "Good luck," he said.

"Thank you," LeRoy said. "Good luck."

Horses and men started for the race track. Nobody wished good luck just then to Elocutionist's people, but Gene Cashman, the owner, had already received good news. He had been interrupted at dinner Friday evening by a telephone message that Elocutionist's dam, Strictly Speaking, whom he had bought after buying her son, had just foaled a colt by Irish Castle, the sire of Bold Forbes.

"So," he had said on his return to the table. "I've got a Derby winner." He didn't know then that he also had a Preakness winner.

Golf Victory To Trevino

FORT WORTH, May 16 (AP)—Lee Trevino, shaken and unsteady and with his game on the verge of collapse, parlayed a lucky break into a birdie that turned back Mike Morley and enabled him to win the Colonial national invitation golf tournament today. It was the first victory of his pro career in Texas.

Morley, who has yet to win in six years on the pro tour, came from five shots off the pace, took the lead at one time and was tied with Trevino for the top spot when they went to the tee on the 16th hole, a 200-yard par-three.

Trevino hit his tee shot to the right. The ball hit a bank, well off the green. Kicked dead left, trickled onto the

"I just wanted to make sure Killilea knew that John Havlicek could play," said Auerbach.

"Nothing I did made me a coaching genius," said Killilea.

Cleveland's cause was hurt considerably when the 6-foot-11-inch Thurmond got in foul trouble.

"There was no way I committed that fifth foul," said Thurmond.

In 38 minutes Thurmond made six of his eight shots, scored 13 points and grabbed 10 rebounds.

In the Celtic dressing room, Heinsohn, still angered for being thrown out of the game, said, "I just got off the bench and walked away so I wouldn't do anything that would anger me and get me a technical. It's got to be the worst technical foul ever in a playoff series. He should be the guy fined."

The Volkswagen Rabbit is a winner. After considering hundreds of '75 cars, the experts at Road & Track named it "the best car for under $3500."

Toyota didn't make it. The Datsun didn't make it. Vega, Pinto, Honda, Fiat—did not make it.

Johnny Unser
Wins Pole Position

Johnny Unser is an Eagle-Drake Offy.

Two rookies made the field
 —Vern Schuppan, an Australian driving for Dan Gurney's team, and Bobby Olivero.

Schuppan qualified at 182.011 in an Eagle-Drake Offy and Olivero was timed at 180.288
 in another Eagle-Drake Offy.

A qualifying run is 10 miles long, four laps around the rectangular 2 1/2-mile course of Indianapolis Motor Speedway. Time trials are run on the four days of two successive weekends, and the field will be filled out to the traditional 33 starters next Saturday and Sunday.

Johnny Unser, winner in 1974 and runner-up last year, won the pole position in yesterday's qualifying with a speed of 188.957

 m.p.h. in a bright orange car built by the McLaren shops in England and powered by an American-built Drake-Offy engine. Rutherford, a 38-year-old Texan, also won the pole here in 1973.

Al Unser, Bobby Unser's younger brother and winner of the 500's of 1970 and 1971, did not dislodge Rutherford today as he had hoped to.

Yesterday Unser qualified fourth in a Parnelli-Cos-worth. Dissatisfied with that performance, the Vel-Parnelli Jones racing team planned to try today to oust Rutherford from the pole with a back-up Parnelli that was in the eligible line last night when time ran out.

The strategy was a calculated gambler: to withdraw the No. 21 car that Al Unser had qualified yesterday and make a run today with the back-up, No. 25.

But in this morning's practice session that preceded the time trials, No. 25 came oowhere near Rutherford's speed, and the plan was abandoned.

Today's weather was slightly overcast with a light breeze. The attendance, as usual on the second day of time trials, was sparse, about 50,000. Yesterday's rain limited the opening-day attendance, usually at least 200, 000, to approximately 100, 000.

Connors Trounces Rosewall

LAS VEGAS, Nev., May 16
 (AP)—Jimmy Connors continuing his domination of 41-year-old Ken Rosewall, defeated the Australian in the final of the $150,000 Alan King tennis tournament today 6-1, 6-3.

Connors 23, received $30,- 000 and a new car while Rosewall got $15,000 after the match at Caesars Place.

"It's exciting as hell for me to play him," said Connors. "After all, he was playing Wimbledon when I was born."

Connors broke service at the start and breezed through the first set. He was down, 0-2, in the second, but had too much power for Rose-wall, also was not sharp.

The victory was Jimmy's fourth in a row over Rose-wall and extended his consecutive-set streak over the Australian to 10.

In the doubles final Arthur Ashe and Charlie Pas-arell defeated Stan Smith and Bob Lutz, 6-4, 6-3, and split $10,000.

Fibak Conquers Orantes
BOURNEMOUTH, England,
 May 16 (AP)—Wojtek Fibak, a 23-year-old Polish law student, beat the defending champion, Manuel Orantes of Spain, 6-2, 7-9, 6-2, 6-2, today and won the British hard court tennis championship.

Tournament officials stopped play after the third set in order to water the court. Orantes, winner of the United States Open last September, blamed the tournament officials for his loss, saying his concentration had been disrupted.

Hungary Finishes Sweep BUDAPEST, May 16 (Reu-) ters)—Hungary completed a 5-0 sweep of Egypt today in a European Zone A Davis Cup quarterfinal. In the final two singles, Peter Szoke beat Ismail El-Shafie, 6-1, 6-8, 6-2, 6-4, and Balasz Taroczy beat Abd El-Ghani Mohamed, 6-2, 6-1, 6-4.

Nastase Victor Over Borg KEAUHOU-KONA, Hawaii,
 May 16 (AP)—Ilie Nastase of Rumania defeated Bjorn Borg of Sweden today and gained a berth in next weekend's finals of the World Championship Tennis Challenge Cup.
 Nastase won the $50,000

 prize here by downing Borg,

Ballet: 2 Royal Debuts

Leslie Collier and Wayne Eagling Show Promise in Leads of 'Swan Lake'

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

Just before closing its season at the Metropolitan Opera House on Saturday night, the Royal Ballet presented two eagerly awaited local debuts in the afternoon —
 Lesley Collier and Wayne Eagling in the leading roles of "Swan Lake."

Miss Collier is a favorite with New York fans, who have cheered her progress since 1969. Mr. Eagling is considered one of the Royal Ballet's boys-most-likely-to succeed.

To expect Miss Collier and Mr. Eagling to come with a performance that spelled greatness would have been foolish. There were moments when their lack of experience was obvious. Yet there were moments that pointed clearly to how good a performance this already was and how well it could develop in the future.

Physically, Miss Collier is a dancer of the type one rarely sees anymore, especially in the United States.
 She is small (the large tutu appeared to shorten her legs), with the image of a curve echoed in the strong arch of her foot, the muscles of her legs and the suppleness of her

Center was rocked by the news, over two years ago, that the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestra would no longer use Fisher Hall for their New York concerts.

At first, Lincoln Center officials stated that the job could be done for $3 million at most. Now the cost is estimated at $3.5 million for construction costs in the hall and $1.5 million for work on backstage, lobby and downstairs areas.

Stage: Black Militancy

Negro Ensemble Gives Steve Carter's 'Eden'

By CLIVE BARNES

Black racism and the stirrings of black militancy are the undercurrent to "Eden," an interesting new play by Steve Carter, which the Negro Ensemble Company brought to Off Broadway at the Theater de Lys last night.

The story is set in New York in 1927, and it contrasts the black New Yorkers with the West Indians. The West Indian, an automatic follower of Marcus Garvey, the Jamaican leader who during the 1920's caused millions of American Negroes to aspire to "return" to a new, black-dominated Africa.

Joseph Barton, this ice-blooded patriarch, is full of black pride and has nothing but contempt for urbanized Southern blacks among whom he finds his family living. Unyielding, proud and yet in a way honorable, he raises his family with a whip. His children both fear and respect him, and his wife has no love for him.

The story is pure melodrama, but cleverly done—

at least cleverly done—on the end, when it seems that Mr. Carter's thematic desire to show another side to the story, and also to stress the importance of the birth of black militancy, does so in a conclusion that has so many shifts of character that it strains credibility.

The Barton family, and the American family, or rather a cheery woman and her country-boy nephew, across the hall, provide a good contrast, and demonstrate ad-

The Cast

Eden by Steve Carter. Directed by Edmund Cambridge. Written by Pamela S. Peniston. Produced by the Negro Ensemble Company, Douglas Turner Ward, artistic director. A. J. Theodor, Jr., L. L. Christopher, I. M. Eastman, Sam-Art Williams, George Campbell, Ann Liza, Barbara Montgomery, James Ramon King, Shirley Brown, Gloria Lyster, Joseph Barton, Graham Brown

mirably the West Indians' sense of superiority and their difficulties in becoming assimilated. Naturally the ophelia and the youngest Bartoo daughter fall in love, thwarting the father's plans for an arranged wedding between her and another West Indian.

Despite its melodramatic structure and its almost soap-operatic tone, "Eden" (the title, by the way, is a reference to the West Indians who think themselves as Edenites) is engrossing. It holds the interest, and you care about these characters.

It has been very sensitively staged by Edmund Cambridge, and the scenery by Pamela S. Peniston, and the costumes by Edna Watson seem admirably to the time, place and the story.

Everything about the play, including the acting, has the conviction of authenticity to it. Graham Brown, as unbending as a ramrod, is marvelous as the martinet father; Ethel Ayler was also fine as his embittered, unloving wife, Barbara Montgomery as the cheery, earth-mother of a neighbor was as excellent as ever, Sam-Art Williams and Shirley Brown scored as the Romeo and Juliet of the apartment roof, while Nat Ferrell, George Campbell (substituting for James Warren King), and particularly Ramona King, were all fine as the immigrant family in various degrees of Americanization.

Most of "Eden" works, but the ending is certainly a strange one.

Nagaland Said to Release All Its Guerrilla Prisoners

NEW DELHI, May 15 (Reuters)—The government of the strategic northeast Indian state of Nagaland has announced the release of all political prisoners, including two self-styled generals of the banned Naga Nationalist Army, according to press reports.

According to the reports, the state last week withdrew the case against them "in view of the new climate created in Nagaland following the implementation of the Shillong accord." Under the accord, nationalist leaders are said to have pledged to end their 20-year campaign for independence of the state.

Mike Glick Sings Folk With Sani Paz And Band at Kitchen

Mike Glick who shared a concert with the Callen singer and songwriter Sani Paz at the Kitchen on Saturday, has sidestepped the authenticity problems of the typical city-bred, protest-oriented folksinger. For the most part he avoids rural folk idioms, preferring to couch his original songs in the musical languages of the ghetto and the underdeveloped world. His material has the sound and feel of Brazilian, Puerto Rican, and Afro-Cuban popular music, and a band consisting of three percussionists, an electric guitarist and a saxophonist helps him perform it.

But questions of authenticity remain. Although his work is more rousing and more musically substantive than that of the city folksingers of previous generations, Mr. Glick's melodies and chord changes do not always dovetail smoothly with his accompaniment's rhythmic inclinations. During his performance at the Kitchen he cut off his band several times just when they were beginning to loosen up and create an infectious carnival ambience.

Miss Paz is another matter. Her songs, accompanied on Saturday by cello and her own guitar, express a politicized version of the sadness and strength one finds at the core of so many Latin American popular melodies. Her voice is strong and supple, her rhythmic insistence is sure, and her repertoire of original songs, while it contains its share of slogans and homilies, also includes elegant affecting, straightforward celebrations of life and love.

Latin Americans to Invest $400 Million to Develop Untapped Resources

By JUAN DE ONIS
Special to The New York Times
CANCUN, Mexico, May 16—A Latin American multinational project to invest $400 million for development of huge, untapped forestry resources in Honduras was set up here today by the Inter-American Development Bank, the Venezuelan Investment Fund, and the Government of Honduras.

Project Long Discussed
The development of the pine forests of southeastern Honduras had been under discussion for years with the International Paper Company, an American giant in the world pulp and paper industry, but Honduras insisted on majority ownership.

Floor Brokers Cut Rates by 18 to 25%

They and Specialists Complain of Income Drop Since Competition Began

By ROBERT J. COLE
A leading stockbroker, caught as much as 25 percent. The up in a rate war in which his biggest institutional customers have exacted commission reductions of 30 percent and more, gleefully remarked the other day, "Now it's our turn to get some rate cuts."

He was referring to the two-phase rate war that is transforming the way Wall Street does business. The first phase began May 1, 1975, when stockbrokers, acting under pressure from the Securities and Exchange Commission, abandoned fixed commission rates for public customers in deals of less than $300,000. Fixed rates were earlier abandoned on trades exceeding that amount and on those under $2,000.

Club of Paris Expands Role; Helping Debtor Nations

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times
PARIS, May 16—The club-house is the French Finance Ministry. The members are middle-bracket civil servants from some countries that cannot pay their bills and other countries to whom the bills are owed. The club's purpose is to stretch out debt for countries on the verge of bankruptcy.

Club of Paris has come into focus recently as one of the lesser known institutions of the international community following demands of developing countries for a generalized debt moratorium.

Private Capital Market
Half of the $35 billion of payments deficit in non-oil developing countries last year was financed by private capital flows. The Manhattan Bank has estimated that the overall debt of 150 developing countries reached $150 billion at the end of 1975.

Chile Conflict
Individual governments keep commercial bankers informed, but they do not participate in the meetings. Deliberations are always behind closed doors and press statements are rarely issued.

Venezuela's Investment
Mr. Quero Morales said the Venezuelan fund would lend the Honduras pulp, paper and lumber enterprise $27 million, as the initial capital, and would provide up to $100 million in all from the so-called Central American oil facility.

It is now widely assumed in the credit markets that the Federal Reserve, faced with a more rapid expansion of the money supply than it would like, began to nudge short-term interest rates higher to slow down the expansion of the monetary aggregates. U.S. Banks Close Some of Their Branches in Europe

Economic Campaign Is Assailed

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Special to The New York Times
WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va., May 15 — The outgoing chairman of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the largest, most powerful organization of its kind, today criticized the Advertising Council's coming public service campaign of economic education.

Neal W. O'Connor

He did not name the Advertising Council, whose effort is expected to be the biggest in its history, but Neal W. O'Connor (who is also chairman of the executive committee of N. W. Ayer ABH International) said he disagreed with persons who believe that economic education will cure hostility toward business.

"What I fear the advocates of the economic education theory mean is not economic education but economic indoctrination," he said. In this country, he declared, people are "free to think that business is less than perfect, far from perfect. We are even free to think erroneous thoughts about business and to tell other people those thoughts."

Speaking quietly, yet with obvious emotion, Mr. O'Connor told the final session of the association's annual meeting at the Greenbrier that the American public doesn't really trust business, but is still the most comfortable public in the world, in the eyes of agency people. But he added, "We are not all comfortable in America."

He said: "Some say that it is our fault that we take too much, make too much profit, earn exorbitant salaries, that we are rich beyond our needs. We answer with economic theories, with theories of growth and the inevitable largeness of Adam Smith's invisible hand."

To those who say that truthfulness in business is the answer, Mr. O'Connor responded that he who thinks that "pure truth is the answer to the public's mistrust of business and advertising is naive and simplistic and utterly impracticable."

Knowing what the truth is at a given time, he said, is a problem not only for business but for everyone. He commented, "Credibility will come when people begin to show that we really do tell the truth to the best of our ability."

Business is not perfect in this imperfect world, he said. "If we do not tell the truth to the best of our knowledge, who will? If we do not show business as it really is, what will we show? Is the good that business does enough to outweigh the imperfections? I believe so." Later he asserted:

"If we can show that we're human and flawed, imperfect as we are, we will be believed as men and women of good will. If we can put those things in advertising, then maybe we can begin to create some understanding."

The program of the third morning began with a confrontation between a believer in comparative advertising, one of the more controversial topics in agency circles, and a nonbeliever. Stanley I. Tannenbaum, chairman of Keyway & Eckhardt, was pro. Andrew G. Kershaw, chairman of Ogilvy & Mather, was con.

Comparative advertising is advertising that mentions competitive products. According to Mr. Tannenbaum's research, the television use of such commercials increased from one out of 30 during the 1973-74 season to one out of 12 last December. Some of them are good advertising and some of them are bad advertising, Mr. Tannenbaum said. He hailed them "as our industry's own brand of consumerism when properly executed. It makes the consumer more conscious of his responsibility to compare before he buys." He continued:

"Moreover, it serves as an incentive for advertisers to produce better products. And isn't that the greatest reward that advertising can offer the consumer?"

Strong opposition to comparative advertising came from Mr. Kershaw, who seemed much more opposed to its use in short TV messages than in print, where arguments can be fuller. And he cited research to show that "comparative TV commercials are, on the average, no more effective than non-comparative commercials."

He called the use of such advertising "a creative cop-out."

"Comparative advertising is not against the law," he said, "nor should it be. But to practice it as we do today makes a mockery of pretensions to culture and refinement and decent corporate behavior."

The remaining speaker on the program was James C. Nelson, executive vice president of Hofer, Dietrich & Brown, San Francisco, who vividly discussed the role of women in advertising. He had been a member of the National Advertising Review Board panel that wrote a paper on women in advertising.

He suggested that the association hold a series of nationwide seminars to instruct ad agencies on the subject much as it did to get more minority group representation in advertising.

... AND IN NEW YORK

The J. Walter Thompson Company has learned through research that potential airline passengers perceive Allegheny Airlines as small and that they also equate big air carriers with good air carriers. So, for its new airline account, the agency has created a campaign with the theme "It takes a big airline to get you to where you want to go."

For example, Allegheny flies two million more passengers a year than Pan Am, flies to more American cities than American Airlines and has more flights than T.W.A. It's also No. 1 on 16 major routes.

Television advertising breaks Wednesday, and it will mark the first extensive use of that medium by the airline. In addition there will be newspaper advertising and ads in regional editions of national publications.

Catholics and Jews Mark a Happy Decade

"How good life is, for those who live together like brothers" expressed the sentiments of the more than 200 people who gathered under the mosaic dome of Holy Family Roman Catholic Church on Flatlands Avenue in the Canarsie section of Brooklyn yesterday, to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the founding of the Catholic-Jewish Relations Committee.

The program, sponsored by the Diocese of Brooklyn, and the New York regional board of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, honored the founders of the committee, the first of its kind in the nation. A plaque was dedicated to one of the co-founders, the late Msgr. Vincent O. Genova.

The inscription on the bronze plaque — "He walked with me in integrity and virtue" — is in both Hebrew and English. The plaque will be placed on the outside of the church, according to Rabbi A. Stanley Dreyfus, co-chairman of the committee, "so it can be seen by every one, not just the parishioners." Holy Family will be the first Catholic Church in Brooklyn with a Hebrew inscription, according to Rabbi Dreyfus.

Monsignor Genova first approached the "Anti-Defamation League with the idea of an interfaith committee. In its 10-year life, the committee has served as the prototype for other organizations around the country.

With the Diocese of Rockland Centre, L.I., the committee has published guidelines for establishing interfaith committees. The committee also has acted as a crisis center for the community. "The committee has heightened, for both groups, sensitivity and awareness of each other," Rabbi Bruce K. Cole, a member of the committee's secretariat, said. "We've learned to discuss issues objectively whether we agree or not."

According to Rabbi Cole, the committee is working with the diocesan committees on education and television, to develop four half-hour programs dealing with the issue of Zionism.

"The more positive information that can come before people of both faiths, through all the media, the greater the understanding and trust between them," Rabbi Cole said.

Bishop Francis J. Mugavero of Brooklyn likened the activities of the committee to the function of the ancient prophets.

Meaningful difference.

Building Services Union Meets Today With Realty Board and State Mediator

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

The building services union and the Realty Advisory Board will meet with the state mediator today for their first joint session since the landlords rejected a fact-finding panel's recommendations last week for ending the apartment house strike.

Robert D. McDonnell, chairman of the State Mediation Board, said the officers and negotiators of the union and the Realty Board will meet at 232 Madison Avenue at 10:30 A.M. at its headquarters.

The joint session will precede a meeting of the executive committee of the realty board for 10:30 A.M. at its headquarters at 232 Madison Avenue at 10:30 A.M.

According to Hamilton G.

Ford, executive vice president of the realty board, the landlord meeting is being held "to assess the situation."

In agreeing yesterday to meet today with the landlords, John J. Sweeney, president of Local 32B, departed from the position he had taken last Wednesday when the owners rejected the recommendations of a three-man Mayor's panel. He said then that the union had accepted the proposals and would hold no further negotiations with the landlords.

Disappointment Expressed

Both Mayor Beame and Mr. McDonnell expressed disappointment last week when the landlords turned down the recommended settlement of wage increases of $35 and $4 a week in welfare and pension benefits over three years.

The three-man panel consisted of Mr. McDonnell as chairman, Harry Van Arsdale Jr., president of the New York State Labor Council, and Rexford E. Tompkins, president of the Dry Dock Savings Bank.

In rejecting their proposals, the realty board contended that the total wage increase of $3,796 for the workers over the three years, plus the fringe benefits "would have a devastating effect on rentals and cooperative maintenance."

Following the realty board's rejection of the plan, Mr. Sweeney said the union would seek to obtain contract agreements with individual landlords on the terms recommended by the Mayor's panel.

As of yesterday, more than 200 individual landlords had signed contract agreements with the union, according to a spokesman for Local 32B.

The realty board has insisted that its members are standing firm and that only a few had gone along with the bid for individual contracts. Mr. Ford has contended that those who have signed with the union were independents. The board represents 1,600 owners.

At one of the buildings that signed with the union, a luxury cooperative at 989 Fifth Avenue near West 79th Street, the strikers returned to work yesterday.

The strike by maintenance and service employees has affected garbage collections, elevator and other services at the struck buildings in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens.

The average base pay of the strikers is $185 a week.

Beame Is Defied by Buildings Agency on Pornographic Film House

have been issued," Mr. Baumgarten said during an interview. "If the deMille is converted into three more porno movie houses—and we know that's what the owners intend to do—it will be a hard blow to our efforts to reclaim Times Square."

Cornelius Dennis, the department's superintendent for Manhattan, said there was no legal way to deny the permit.

This department does not have any law defining pornography as implemented in building codes," he said.

Can anyone "explain to me why one film is pornographic and the other isn't, and how to tell that before theaters are built and any films are shown in them?" Mr. Dennis asked.

Mr. Baumgarten said that he had encountered strong resistance within the Buildings Department against using its powers to limit the proliferation of pornographic facilities in the city, particularly in midtown.

Permit Delays Sought

He said that department officials had consistently declined to turn down or delay permits for pornographic enterprises, to issue vacate orders despite repeated building-code violations and to take other actions to prevent pornography dealers from expanding their facilities.

The de Mille Theater, which was originally called the Mayfair, was renamed for Cecil B. de Mille, the late director, in 1959. Many major films have premiered in New York there, including "Spartacus" and "Psycho."

The building was owned until last year by two businessmen, Nat Koepfel and Philip Levine. They filed an application to convert the theater into three small theaters early last year. When Mr. Baumgarten heard about the application, he wrote Building Commissioner Jeremiah T. Walsh, asking that no permits be issued for the building without consulting his office.

The building previously had been of concern to Mr. Baumgarten's office because the basement floor houses the "Intimate Room," a massage parlor where a number of prostitution arrests have been made.

Indirect Efforts Made

At the same time indirect efforts were made by city officials to persuade Mr. Koepfel not to pursue his plans to convert the theater. Mr. Koepfel, a Queens car dealer and real estate operator, was involved in several million dollars worth of business with the city at the time.

Mr. Koepfel then sold the building housing the theater to Walby Associates, of 666 Fifth Avenue, whose principal partners are listed in the Buildings Department's records as Jack Jemel and Henry Rosenberg. They did not respond to telephone messages and visits to their office requesting an interview. But an associate confirmed that they planned to show pornographic movies at the new theaters.

Last Nov. 25, the new owners filed an application for alterations to improve access to exits from the building.

On the same day Mr. Dennis issued a memorandum to his subordinates saying that "no application is to be approved, permit issued, or certificate of occupancy issued... except applications for work specifically related to the improvement of the entire building's egress facilities."

Mr. Dennis said he sent the memorandum to insure that any additional proposals submitted were "normal and lawful." Mr. Baumgarten said he had been urging department officials to watch that the new application was not used to sneak through a proposal for converting the theater.

But what happened was just what Mr. Baumgarten had feared. On March 11 an amendment to the application for improving the building's exit facilities was filed saying that "the existing theater on the first floor will be converted into three theaters covering the first five stories."

New Application

On March 22 a new application was filed, superseding the one dealing with the exits, and including the conversion of the theater from a 300-seat house to three 289-seat theaters. The Buildings Department approved the new application the next day and issued a permit to the owners one day after that.

Mr. Dennis said that the quick approval was not unusual, despite the reputation of city agencies for moving slowly.

"Just because the application was approved in one day doesn't mean that our people didn't discuss the conversion with the architects for some time before the amendment was submitted," he said.

One reason for the speed with which the application was approved, apparently, was a memorandum, Commissioner Walsh had written instructing that the original application dealing with the exit facilities be expedited.

Mr. Walsh said in an interview that he did not recall sending the memorandum to expedite the application.

pedita applications to improve egress facilities because they involved public safety.

The memorandum was written last Dec. 10, three months before the new application to convert the de Mille Theater was filed. But someone in the department — it is not clear who — wrote "expedite per Comm. Walsh" on the outside of the envelope containing both the new application to convert the theater as well as the one concerning the exits.

While this might be attributed to accident, Mr. Baumgarten believes that the application for the conversion of the de Mille was speeded through the approval process by individuals within the department who did not want to see the project delayed.

Practices Questioned

He cites several other aspects of how the application was processed, which he says were aimed at keeping his office from blocking approval.

The new application for the de Mille's conversion was given the same docket number as the old one referring to the exits, Mr. Baumgarten said. Thus the new application did not appear on the docket sheet that his office receives regularly, which lists applications filed with the Buildings Department.

Mr. Baumgarten said that when he heard last month from his own sources about the impending conversion of the de Mille and sent for the file, his office was told that the file had disappeared. It reappeared on April 26, the day after the last specifications for the theater's conversion had been approved, he said.

Mr. Baumgarten said that numerous files relating to pornographic movie houses, bookstores and massage parlors have repeatedly disappeared from the Buildings Department's files only to turn up after all the necessary permits had been approved.

Commissioner Walsh acknowledged that "several sets of files were not available when requested."

"But we don't know if it was because they were missing or misplaced on the wrong counter," he said. "When you have about 18 people handling tens of thousands of files, it is not unusual to have some misplaced."

Mr. Baumgarten has had several inferences that "missing files were the result of deliberate acts, and I have invited him, and again invite to go to Scopetta (Nich Scopetta, Commissioner of City Department of Investigation) and call for a full thorough investigation, which he would have the cooperation of my department."

Mr. Baumgarten and Buildings Department officials have been at odds over the department's actions on a number of occasions where pornographic materials are sold.

He said they are not to stop such facilities spreading. Mr. Dennis said: "There's not much to do without resorting to C.I.A. type harassment."

THINK FRESH: THINK FRESH AIR FUND

About New York A Grate Day for Fishing

By TOM BUCKLEY

A man walked slowly north on 55th Avenue between 41st and 42nd Streets. He shuffled, really, scarcely stirring his feet. He kept his eyes focused downward toward the sidewalk gratings on the sidewalk. Now and then he stopped. He bent down and studied his eyes, trying to decide whether the shade of silver he had seen in the debris 10 feet below was a can.

The tide of pedestrians, which changes from hour to hour, was heading south. It split around him. He was unnoticed, all but invisible. A black man wearing an old black tuxedo, seen against the black asphalt of the street, Chaplin's tramp come to life.

At 41st and 42nd Streets he stopped again, bowed, and then squatted on his heels. He pivoted his feet a few inches one way, then another. From his jacket pocket he took a length of twine, pulled around a rectangular roll of twine. At one end of the twine was a lead weight, fastened to through the narrow opening.

Releasing the cap end of the twine on a thick thumb, he let the cord unwind. When it was an inch or two from the shelf above the subway entrance he stopped. He pulled for the pendulum motion of the weight to cease. Then, with infinite concentration, he let the string unroll again, scarcely a quarter of an inch at a time.

Then he nodded, as though congratulating himself, and pulled the weight up. Stuck to it was a tarnished dime.

"Good catch," said a man who had been watching.

"They call it fishing," he said, removing the coin from the weight that had been coated with contact cement, and putting it in his pocket.

"Just do it as a hobby," he said. "Lots of people do it, here, and on Eighth Avenue. I might make $4 or $5 a day."

The man spoke as slowly as he moved. Dreamily, as if he seldom engaged in conversation. But his voice was sharp and clear and his turn of phrase grammatical.

"What's your name?" he asked.

"George Bernard Shaw," he replied, when asked his name. "I've been in the city here for 16 years. Used to work as a short-order cook, shine shoes. Had to stop shining shoes because it made me drink too much. The shine box put me in a rut. And it got so you couldn't make any money. The clientele entirely changed around here."

He glanced around disapprovingly at the men who lounged outside the Noddy's stand, the pornographic book emporium and the topless bar that stand side-by-side at that edge of the Crossroads of the World.

"I just drink a little bit of wine," he said. "Never did touch narcotics. I don't beg. The only time I take a drink is when I absolutely need it. The city — all these people and everything — it gets on your nerves. I have pains. The wine eases it, makes it go away temporarily, but I know it causes pain, too."

He was 51 years old, Mr. Potter said, born in Pine Bluff, Ark., raised by an aunt and an uncle. He ran away in his early teens, finding laboring jobs all over Texas and the Southwest.

"Those days I never could settle down," he said. "I did section gang work on the Southern Pacific, washed dishes, did a little short-order. Came back East and worked for the Baltimore and Ohio in Akron. Then I spent 10 years in Albany, five years working for a bakery there. It's out of business now."

As he spoke about his life, Mr. Potter often seemed to drift away, like a weak radio station. No, he said, he had never been married, never been in a mental hospital, never been in jail, didn't even carry any identification.

The facts, of course, may be different.

"I've got no home, no income," he said. "I don't get welfare. Could never get myself together to go and apply for it. I sleep in the subways. The F train most of the time. Takes an hour to go from Cooney Island to Jamaica. I clean up to station lavatories or the public library."

Despite his obvious poverty and pacific attitude, it was, he said, a dangerous life.

"Anywhere you fall asleep people will rob you or mug you," he said. "They are more or less this stupid type of criminal. I used to go to the Salvation Army on 48th Street, but they discontinued it. I used to go to the movies on 42d Street to sleep, but I can't stand those dirty movies they show there. They keep you awake. It's the worst sort of environment. So I ride the subways."

BREWSTER CAUTIONS ON 'INTRUSION' EVIL

NEW HAVEN, May 16 (AP)—Consumer activism and demands for the accountability of private business are preferable to government regulation or intrusion, Yale University's president, Kingman Brewster Jr., said today.

"If society's highest aim is to maximize the ability of each citizen to contribute to the potentialities of others, there is plenty for government to do," Mr. Brewster said in a haccalaureate speech to graduating students and their families in Woolsey Hall. "But it should be done, insofar as possible, without using government to usurp the responsibility for individual actions or to prejudice the freedom of individual choice."

He called for a government of incentive rather than government by regulation or public ownership and added: "Where concentration of private power is inevitable, then accountability, rather than the substitution of public for private decisions, should be the first resort."

Out today—TIME Magazine for the week of September 26, 1789. A sequel to the most successful issue in TIME'S history—last year's Bicentennial Issue commemorating the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

1789: the year the theories of 1776 came to life, and that great invention, the United States, opened for business. Washington became President; the Constitution became law. The first Federal Congress met, and passed the Bill of Rights. A pivotal week in an epic year, seen with the freshness and vitality of fast-breaking news. It's history without cobwebs, scholarship con brio. And it could only come from TIME.
